DANUBE (German Donau, anc. Danubius and Ister), an important river, and, next to the Volga, the largest in Europe, originates in the Berge, a mountain torrent which rises in the E. declivity of the Schwarzwald in Baden, at an elevation of 2,850 feet above the level of the sea. This stream, when joined by the Brigach, & by the waters of a spring from the castle garden of Donaueschingen, takes the name of the Donau. It It flows first generally E.N.E. through an alpine country to Ulm, thence E.N.E. and E.S.E. to Passau it traverses the plain of Bavaria. From Passau to Vienna E.S.E., it intersects a hilly region, & the remainder of its course, E.S.E. to Waitzén, S. to Bacz, & E. to the Black Sea, is through a country generally flat, except at the defile of the "iron gate," E. of Orsova. Length (direct) 1,000 m., or incldg. windings, 1,725 m. It drains a surface of about 250,000 sq. m.: its av. fall is 18 in. per m., but below Pesth it is only 3 in.; at Ulm it is 1,400, at Regensburg 1,000, at Passau 800, at Vienna 450, and at Pesth 300 feet above the level of the sea. Its breadth at Ulm is 108 feet, and in its lower course 6,000 feet; depth at Ulm, 6 feet, at Passau 16 feet, and lower down average 20 feet. It passes Sigmaringen and Ulm in Würtemberg, Dillingen, Hochstädt, Donauwörth, Ingolstadt, Regensburg, and Passau in Bavaria; Linz, Diernstein, Korneuburg, & Vienna, in Austria; Presburg, Komorn, Gran, Waitzen, Buda, Pesth, Peterwardein, and Carlowitz in Hungary; Belgrade, Semendria, & Orsova in Servia; Widin, Nicopoli, Rutschuk, Silistria, & Hirschova, in Bulgaria; Giurgevo, & Brahilov in Wallachia. The chief affluents of the Danube are, on the right, the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Ens, Raab, Drave, Save, Morava, Timok, Isker, Vid, & Juntra; & on the left, the Altmühl, Nab, Regen, Morsch, Waag, Gran, Theiss, Temes, Chyl, Aluta, Jalomnitza, Sereth, & Pruth. Near its mouth in the Black Sea, it separates into several branches, the S.most of which, called the branch of St. George, forms, by the treaty of Adrianople, the boundary between the Ottoman empire and Russia. It communi. by canals with the Elbe by means of the Moldau, and with the Rhine by the Altmühl. It is navigable for vessels of 100 tons from Ulm. DEAD SEA, or LAKE ASPHALTITES (Arabian Bahrel-Loot, "sea of Lot"), a lake of Palestine, celebrated in scripture as the site of Sodom & Gomorrah, between lat. 31° 5′ & 31° 52′ N., & lon. 35° 26′ & 35° 43′ E., its N. extremity nearly 20 m. E. Jerusalem. Mean length N. to S. about 35 m.; average breadth from 10 to 12 m.; but its size varies greatly in different seasons & years (Robinson). It is enclosed in a valley, bounded by bare limestone mntns., & according to recent researches, its depth is about 350 fathoms, & its surface 1,312 feet below that of the Mediterranean Sea; it being thus by far the deepest known fissure on the earth's surface. The river Jordan enters it on its N. side. Its waters are thoroughly impregnated with salt; & it has not been proved that any animal exists in this sea. A mntn. of rock salt on its S.W. side, called Jebl Usdum, "stone of Sodom," preserves the name of that city, ruined with others, as described in Genesis xix. 24-28; & traces of towns or buildings, are reported on doubtful authority, to have been seen at certain times in its bed. Asphaltum was thrown to the surface at its S. extremity in large quantities, after the earthquakes of 1834 & 1837. Messrs Robinson & Smith have found the "Asclepias gigantea," growing at Engedi, on its W. coast, the fruits of which (the famed "apples of Sodom"), though inviting in appearance, crumble in the hand into powder.

DELAWARE, r., N. Y., rises by two principal branches on the W. slope of the Catskill mountains. The Mohawks, or western branch, proceeds from a small lake in a S.W. direction, & turning S.E., it reaches the Pennsylvania line in lat. 42°, & proceeding 7 miles on the line between that state & N. York, it receives the Popacton branch, which also rises in the Catskill mountains, & pursues a S.W. direction to its junction. After the union of these streams, the river pursues a winding course to the S.E., forming the boundary between N. York and Pennsylvania for a distance of fifty miles. It touches the N.W. corner of N. Jersey at Carpenter's point, in lat. 41° 24′, then takes a S.W. direction, until at its passage through the Kittatinny or Blue mountains, it turns to the S.E. This passage, called the Delaware Water Gap, forms one of the most picturesque combinations of mountain & water scenery. The rugged & lofty wall, 1,600 feet high, rises precipitously from the water's edge. The distance through the gorge is about 2 miles, & in one place the river has worn out of the rock a basin from the hill of many acres in extent. There is scarcely room along the water's edge for a road, it being in many places overhung by immense rocks. Through this pass the river has a great depth. At Easton, it receives from the W. the Lehigh, one of its principal tributaries. A little below Easton, the river passes S. Mountain, & has a course S.W. 60 miles to Trenton, in which distance there are 25 rapids, with a total fall of 165 feet. The river, below Trenton, turns to the S.W. until near the bay, which it enters in a S.E. direction. The river, from its source to the ocean, is about 309 miles long. It is navigable for vessels of the largest class, forty miles to Philadelphia; & for sloops, 35 miles further to Trenton. The Delaware is connected to the Hudson river by the Delaware & Hudson, & by the Morris canals. There is also a canal from the Delaware to the Chesapeake bay, 14 miles long, sixty feet wide, & 8 feet deep, sufficient for the passage of small vessels. The largest cities & towns on the Delaware are Philadelphia, Burlington, Trenton, Easton, & Wilmington.

DELAWARE BAY, at the mouth of Delaware river, is a large arm of the sea, 65 miles long, & 18 miles across at its mouth, between Cape May on the N., and Cape Henlopen on the S. In the middle, it is thirty miles across. For seventy miles from the sea, this bay has no safe natural harbor; & within Cape Henlopen, a magnificent work, called the Delaware Breakwater, has been erected by the United States government, consisting of a stone dyke or pier, 1,200 yards long, and another 500 yards long, forming a safe artificial harbor.

DELAWARE, one of the middle United States, next to Rhode Island, the smallest in the Union, & in pop. the least, is bounded N. by Pennsylvania, E. by Delaware r. & bay, S. & W. by Maryland. It is between 38° 27′ & 39° 50′ N. lat., & between 75° 04′ 42″ and 75° 56′ W. lon., & between 1° 13′ & 1° 57′ E. lon. from W. It is 92 m. long, & 23 broad, & contains 2,120 sq. m., or 1,356,800 ac. The pop. in 1790, was 59,094; in 1800, 64,272; in 1810, 72,674; in 1820, 72,749; in 1830, 76,739; in 1840, 78,085; 1850, 91,532.

The state is divided into three counties. The following table gives the number of dwellings, inhabitants, cultivated farms, & manufacturing establishments in each:

The capital is Dover, situated on Jones creek, 7 m. from its entrance into Delaware bay. The surface is generally level; in the S. part it is marshy; in the N. slightly undulating, & in its extreme N. parts are some commanding elevations. A somewhat elevated tableland passes through a portion of the state from N. to S., dividing the waters which fall into Chesapeake bay from those which flow into Delaware bay. This tableland contains a chain of swamps in the western part of this state, from which its principal streams originate. The soil in the N. is a strong clay. Along Delaware river, & for about 10 m. W. of it, the soil is generally a rich clay, well adapted to agriculture; but between this & the swamps the soil is light and sandy. Proceeding toward the south, the soil becomes more sandy, & in Sussex co. sand greatly predominates. Kaoline, or porcelain clay, is found in the north portion, bog-iron ore in the southern, & shell marl throughout the state. There were in 1850, 580,862 acres of land improved, and 375,282 of unimproved, in farms. Cash value of farms, $18,880,031; & the value of implements & machinery, $510,279. Live stock, &c.—Horses, 13,852; asses & mules, 791; milch cows, 19,248; working oxen, 9,797; other cattle, 24,166; sheep, 27,503; swine, 56,261; value of live stock, $1,849,281; of slaughtered animals, $373,665. Agricultural products, &c.—Wheat, 482,511 bushels; rye, 8,066; Indian corn, 3,145,542; oats, 604,518; barley, 56; buckwheat, 8,615; peas & beans, 4,120; potatoes, 240,542; sweet potatoes, 65,443; value of products of the orchard, $46,574; produce of market gardens, $12,714; pounds of butter made, 1,055,308; of cheese, 3,187; molasses, 50 gallons; bees' wax & honey, 41,248 pounds; wool, pounds produced, 57,768; flax, 11,174; hops, 348; hay, tons of, 30,159; clover-seed, 2,525 bushels; other grass seeds, 1,403; flax-seed, 904 bushels; and were made 145 gallons of wine; value of home made manufacs., $33,121.

Manufactures, &c.—There were in the state in 1850, 12 cotton factories, with a capital invested of $585,100, employing 413 males & 425 females, producing 5,205,000 yds. of sheetings, &c., valued at $538,429; 5 woollen factories, with a capital invested of $136,500, employing 113 males & 86 females, manufacturing 157,000 yds. of clot, valued at $244,510; 13 establishments making pig iron, with a capital of $373,500, employing 260 persons, & making 3,630 tons of castings, &c., valued at $267,462; 2 establishments, with a capital invested of $16,000, employing 50 persons manufacturing 300 tons of wrought iron, valued at $55,000; 7 flouring mills, 83 saw mills, 16 tanneries with a cap. of $[illegible], employing 108 persons; value of products, $164,162; 8 printing offices issuing 2 semi-weekly, and 8 weekly newspapers. There were in this state, Jan. 1, 1854, about 30 miles of railroad in operation, & 43 in the course of construction. Capital invested in manufactures, $2,978,945; value of manufactured articles, $4,649,206.

Religion, &c.—There were in this state in 1850, 12 Baptist churches, 21 Episcopal, 9 Friends, 106 Methodist, 26 Presbyterian, 3 Roman Catholic, 1 Union, & 2 other sects; the whole having 180 churches. Total value of church property, $340,345.

Government, &c.—The first constitution was adopted in 1776, the second in 1792, & amended in 1831. The governor is chosen for four years, & is ever after ineligible. The senate consists of three members from each county, chosen for four years. The representatives are seven from each county, chosen once in two years, on the first Tuesday in January. Every male citizen, over twenty-two years of age, who has resided one year in the state, & the last month in the county in which he votes, & paid a tax, has the right of suffrage, & if he be between twenty-one & twenty-two years, & otherwise qualified, he may vote without payment of a tax. The judicial power is exercised by four common-law judges, & a chancellor. There must be one associate judge in each county. Delaware was first settled by the Swedes & Fins in 1630. In convention it adopted the constitution of the United States, December 3d, 1787, by a unanimous vote.

It is bounded north and west by the North Sea, east by the Cattegat & the Baltic, & south by the Elbe. The coasts are greatly indented, & the country is perfectly flat; in the N. some parts of it are below the level of the sea, from the invasions of which it is defended by dykes. On the E. the surface rises into gentle elevations. The highest part of the peninsula is 500 feet, and of the isls. 400 feet above the sea. Holstein and Lauenburg are the best watered districts. Among the isls., only Seeland & Fühnen have rivers, the others being watered by mere brooks. Extensive marshes exist in all the valleys of the peninsula and the islands. Next to the Elbe, which forms the southern boundary of the kingdom for 80 m., the Eider is the largest and most important river. The largest lake is the Arve in Seeland. The principal gulfs are the Lüm-fiord, Ringskoking fiord, Nissum-fiord, and the bays of Kalloe & Flensburg on the continent; the Ise-fiord in Seeland, and Odense fiord, in Fühnen. Between the islands & the peninsula of Denmark & Sweden, there are several passages called sounds, the chief of which are Ore Sund (the Sound), & the Great & Little Belts. The climate of Denmark is humid & cloudy, but, notwithstanding its northern position, it is, from the lowness of its level & the influence of the surrounding seas, much milder than the countries of Germany situated farther south. Mean. temp. of the year, 46°.6, Fahr.; shortest day, 6¼ hours; longest day, 17¼ hours. Storms are rare, and of short duration; av. days of storm 9, rain 137, snow 32. Prevailing winds, W. during spring and summer, and S.W. in autumn and winter. Soil almost entirely alluvial, covered with a vegetable mould well adapted for cultivation, in Jutland and the Duchies, and producing excellent pasturage in the marshy dists. The proportion of cultivated to marsh land is as two to one. Agriculture has been greatly improved of late years, & corn is raised more than necessary for home consumption. The principal crops are barley, wheat, oats, buckwheat, potatoes, hemp, tobacco, & hops. Forests are not extensive, and mostly confined to the E. coasts of the peninsula & the isls. Seeland & Fühnen. Cattle are extensively reared in N. Jutland & the duchies. Horses of an excellent breed, & valuable for military purposes, are reared on a great scale, and exported to the average number of 11,000 per annum. Sheep are of a superior kind. Goats are kept in small numbers, pigs are plentiful, & game is abundant. Oysters, herrings, salmon, & seals are fished on the coasts & in the rivers. As Denmark has no mountains, except in Bornholm, where an inferior quality of coal is found, its mineral products are insignificant. From the absence of coal, metals, & water-power, there are no manufs. of importance in Denmark. Woollen cloths, linens, bonnets, & paper, are manufactured for home consumption. Government formerly protected several branches of manufs., but these are now confined to the porcelain works at Copenhagen, & the cloth factory at Usserod. Roads in general are bad, the best are in Seeland & Fühnen, & the duchies. A r. r. from Altona to Kiel (with branch to Glückstadt), Newmünster to Rendsburg, Hamburg to Berlin, & Copenhagen to Roeskilde. The geographical position of the country is favorable for water communication, & there are many extensive canals, the chief of which are the Schleswig-Holstein canal, with which the Eider river forms a communication between the Baltic & the German Ocean, navigable for vessels of 120 tons, & the Stecknitz canal in Lauenberg, which joins the Elbe to the Baltic by means of the river Trave, but it is navigable only for boats. The principal ports are Copenhagen, Altona, Kiel, Flensburg, & Aalborg. The commerce of Denmark has greatly increased since the peace in 1815; the chief exports are agricultural products, horses, oxen, beer, & brandy. The greater part of these are shipped from Altona. The exports from Iceland, Greenland, the Faroe isls., & consisting of cider down, feathers, skins, dried fish, & wool, are mostly shipped at Copenhagen. The number of merchant vessels belonging to the state is 3,036. Aggregate tonnage, 153,408. Imports in 1851 from Denmark valued at 28,134,769 rix-dollars, from Schleswig 8,463,604. Exports same year, Denmark, 14,705,228; Schleswig, 3,900,496. The Danish government is, with the exception of the duchy of Lauenburg, an absolute monarchy, but since 1834 it is restricted by a national representation. The duchies of Schleswig and Holstein revolted from Denmark, 26th March, 1848; but finally submitted after the battle of Idstedt, July 25th, 1850. As Duke of Holstein and Lauenburg, the king is a member of the German confederation, & has three votes in the full council of the diet; his contingent to the military force is 3,600 men. By the constitution of 1834, the kingdom is divided into four political provinces, represented by four prov. states, the members of which are elected for 6 years. The pop. is divided into three classes, nobles, citizens, & peasants. The state religion is Lutheran, and the king is the head of the church; other sects are tolerated. The poor are provided for by assessment. Elementary education is widely diffused in Denmark, attendance at school is obligatory from the age of 7 to 14. The system of mutual instruction, introduced in 1820, was generally adopted in 1840. The university of Copenhagen, founded 1478, has 52 professors & 1,100 students, a museum of natural history, & a library of about 100,000 vols; & the university of Kiel, founded 1665, 31 professors, 250 students, museum, botanic garden, & a library nearly as extensive. The military force of the kingdom consisted, in 1853, of 24,823 men, & the navy had 3 ships of the line, 7 frigates, 3 corvettes, 4 brigs, 1 bark, 3 schooners, and 10 steamers. Public revenue for the year ending March 31, 1854, 15,795,498 rix-dollars. Expend., 15,169,756 rix-dollars. Debt of the state, 1853, 121,000,000 rix-dollars. The continental part of Denmark, formerly called the Cimbrian Chersonesus, was the country of the Cimbri who ravaged Europe 100 years B.C. Its first kings were descendants of Odin, & hence issued many of the pirates, who under the name of Normans long ravaged W. Europe, & under whom the Danes made irruptions into England in 835 & 1042. After conversion to christianity, the Danes were long the leaders in the affairs of the north. The celebrated Margaret of Denmark, by the treaty of Calmar in 1397, united the 3 kingdoms of the north, & after the dissolution of the union, the Danes kept possession of Norway till 1814, when it was ceded to Sweden. The colonial possessions of Denmark consist of the islands of Faroe & Iceland, & part of the coast of Greenland, & the tropical possessions, viz., the Danish West India Islands, St. Croix, St. Thomas, & St. John, with a number of smaller isls., the agg. pop. of which amounted in 1850 to 117,194. The town Tranquebar, with its dists., on the Coromandel coast, ceded to Denmark by the rajah of Tanjore in 1620, and the small dist. & town of Serampore (Danish Fredericksnagor) in Bengal, founded by the Danish E. I. Co. in 1755, was transferred to England in 1846. Also, the establishments on the coast of Guinea, viz., forts Christiansborg, Fredensborg, Kongensteen, Prindsensteen, & the factory of Augustenborg, the Nicobar isls. in the Bay of Bengal, were taken possession of by the Danes in 1756; in 1840 the pop. of the Danish colony amounted to 6,000, but they were abandoned in consequence of their insalubrity, in 1848.

Situated on the west side of Detroit strait, or river, on ground elevated 30 feet above its surface, 7 m. below the outlet of Lake St. Clair, & 18 m. above the W. extremity of Lake Erie.

The dense part of the city extends 2 miles along the river, & a mile in the rear. Bordering the river, & for 1,200 feet back from it, the plan is rectangular. There are eight avenues; three of these are 200 feet wide, & five others are 120 feet wide, & are well paved. Five of these centre at a public ground called the Grand Circus. The other streets are 60 feet wide, & generally cross each other at right angles; Atwater street, along the river, & Woodbridge street, running parallel with it on the declivity, are chiefly occupied with stores, & dealers in the heavier articles of merchandise. Woodward avenue, leading from the river at right angles with Jefferson avenue through the Campus Martius, a public ground in the central part of the city, is one of the principal business streets. The principal street, running with the course of the river, upon the declivity, & through the most dense portion of the city, is Jefferson avenue. On this street there are many fine buildings occupied as offices, &c., & the most extensive fancy & dry-goods stores are located in it. There are several public squares, the principal of which are the Campus Martius & Circus. Such is the nature of the soil, that in the spring, & after continued rains, they are muddy & inconvenient, to remedy which, wooden pavements have been to some extent resorted to. The houses are mostly built of wood, but many of the stores & private dwellings are constructed of brick in a neat & tasty manner. Among the public buildings deserving of particular notice, is the Central r. r. freight depôt, one of the largest in the U. S. The Free School, formerly occupied as a state house, is built of brick, 60 feet by 90. It has a portico in front, with six Ionic columns with pilasters on the sides, & it is surmounted by a dome 140 feet high. From this dome, the prospect is very beautiful, embracing the strait above & below the city, enlivened with the passing vessels & steamboats, & in the distance, lake St. Clair, & a wide extent of cultivated country around. The City Hall is a neat edifice of brick, 100 feet by 50; two stories high above the basement, & cost $20,000; the lower story is occupied as a market, and in the second, is a spacious hall in which the courts are held. St. Paul's, Episcopal church, is a handsome structure of brick in the Gothic style of architecture, 90 by 50 feet, with a tower 115 feet high of elegant proportions: it has a fine organ. The Presbyterian church is a fine brick edifice, with six Grecian Doric columns, 24 feet high in front, supporting a pediment. It is 90 feet long, besides the portico of 10 feet, & 60 feet wide, with a steeple 130 feet high. The Baptist church is built of brick of the Grecian Ionic order, 70 by 50 feet, with a steeple 100 feet high, ornamented with a handsome dome, & it occupies an elevated situation. St. Anne's cathedral is constructed of hewn granite, 116 by 60 feet, in the Roman Doric order of architecture, with two steeples in front, surmounted with crosses. It has an octagonal dome in the centre, 36 feet in diameter, & 30 feet high. Its interior is well furnished with a splendid organ, &c. There are 20 churches in the city,—2 Baptist, 1 Congregational, 2 Episcopal, 1 German Lutheran, 1 Mariners, 2 Methodist, 3 Presbyterian, 4 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 3 Colored Societies. There are four banks with an aggregate capital of $812,000; an insurance office, & a savings bank; a surveyor-general's office of the U. S. land office, for the districts of Indiana & Michigan; three markets, a theatre, a circus, a county jail, a government magazine, a mechanics' hall, a female seminary, a young ladies' institute, the St. Clair seminary for young ladies, under the direction of the Roman Catholics; several high schools for boys, & numerous public schools. There are published 3 daily, 7 weekly, & 1 tri-weekly newspaper, & 2 monthly publications. There are 6 steam saw mills, & numerous manufacturing establishments. Capital employed in manufactures 1850, $627,935; value of manufactured articles, $1,285,779.

Among the literary institutions, are the Historical Society, founded in 1829; the Michigan State Library Institute, founded in 1838; the Medical Society of the state of Michigan; the Young Men's Society for Moral & Intellectual Improvement, founded in 1832, which has a library of over 1,200 vols. Detroit is admirably situated for trade, & is becoming a great commercial emporium. The navigation of the river & lake are open about 8 months in the year; the arrivals & departures of steam & sailing vessels at this place are very great, & is increasing daily. The tonnage of the port in 1853 was 43,758 tons; value of imports, 1851, $15,416,377; of exports same year $3,961,430. (See Lakes, —Commerce of.) The first steamboat arrival at this place was in August, 1818; now several of the largest depart daily. The Central railroad extends to the Indiana line, & from thence to Chicago, Ill. The Pontiac railroad has been relaid, & is to be extended to Grand Haven, on Lake Michigan.

Detroit was settled by the French in 1683; in 1760 it fell into the hands of the British. In 1784, it came by treaty, into the possession of the United States, who have had a garrison stationed here from 1796 until recently. In 1802, it was incorporated as a city, & in 1805 it was nearly destroyed by fire. In 1812 it was captured by the British, & recaptured in 1813 by the Americans. In 1815, it was re-chartered. In 1837, a great fire occurred in the city, which caused an immense destruction of property.

DOVER, Dubris, a parl. & munic. bor. cinque port, and town of Engl., co. Kent, on the N.W. side of Dover Strait, at the terminus of the S. E. r. r., 66 m. E.S.E. London, 21 m. from Cape Gris-nez, on the opposite side of the English Channel, and 254 m. N.W. Calais. Lat. of castle, 51° 7′ 8″ N., lon. 1° 19′ 5″ E. Pop. 1851, 22,244. The town consists mostly of a collection of old streets on the N. side of its harbor, and a long street on the banks of a small stream, the whole enclosed and backed by chalk downs, on which are the castle, citadel, and several strong detached forts. On the E., extending between the harbor and castle, are a series of residences, newly built, and resorted to by visiters in the bathing season. On the W., the railroad enters the town through a tunnel cut in the cliffs, which here abut into the sea. The castle is a collection of formidable works, occupying 35 acres; its foundation has been attributed to the Romans, and it contains Roman and Saxon towers, a spacious keep forming a bomb proof magazine & barracks for 2,000 men. Other principal edifices are a military hospital, the town-hall and jail, the hospital Maison-Dieu. 21 churches,—3 Baptist, 7 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 3 Independent, 1 Jews synagogue, 3 Methodist, 2 Mormon, and 1 Roman Catholic,—custom-house, work-house, theatre, assembly rooms, museum, baths, docks, bonding, warehouses, and numerous good hotels. The harbor consists of 3 basins, the outer one enclosed between two piers 150 feet apart; large sums have been spent upon it in different reigns, since Henry VII., but its entrance is unfortunately impeded by a movable shingle bar. It is proposed to establish here a harbor of refuge, by throwing out jetties of great magnitude still further into the sea. Dover, the chief port of communication between England and the continent, has continual intercourse by steam-boats with Calais & Boulogne. It imports large quantities of eggs, fruit, & other rural produce, from France, and has a thriving coasting trade and fishery. Ship-building, with sail, rope, and paper making, employ many of the population. The bor. is divided into 3 wards, and governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors. Markets, Wednesday and Saturday. Fair, Nov. 23. Dover is the seat of quarter sessions, a board for licensing pilots, and a court of the constable of the cinque ports. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C.

DUBLIN (Irish Bally-ath-cliath, "the town on the ford of the hurdles," Oubh-linn, "Black pool," the Eblana of Ptolemy), the cap. city of Ireland, & of co. Dublin, on the Liffey, close to its entrance into Dublin Bay, Irish Sea, 66 m. W. Holyhead, & 135 m. W. Liverpool. Lat. of observatory, 53° 23′ 2″ N., lon. 6° 20′ 5″ W. Area of municipal bor., 4,943 ac; of parl. bor., 2,807 ac. Number of houses, 22,000. Pop. of municipal borough 1851, 252,599; of city & suburbs, 257,729. Mean temp. of year, 49°; winter, 39°.8; summer, 59°.6, Fahr.

The city-proper is nearly surrounded by the Circular-road, 9 m. in length, and which accompanied by a branch of the Grand canal on the S. & S.E., encloses an area of 1,264 acres, intersected from W. to E. by the Liffey, its E. portion comprising 786 acres, & its N. 478 do. The river is here crossed by 7 stone & 2 iron bridges, and bordered on each side by noble granite quays, 2¼ m. in length. Nearly in the centre of the S. half of the city is Dublin castle, an edifice of different ages, built on an elevated site, & containing an arsenal, an armory, the viceregal chapel, & various government offices, with the state apartments of the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who, however, resides generally at a mansion in Phœnix park. Adjoining the castle on the S. are its gardens; & on its N. side is the elegant exchange, a line of streets extending from which may be considered, with the Liffey, to separate Dublin into 4 quarters, differing greatly in their appearance & character. The S.W. quarter, occupying all the site of the anc. city, is mostly ill-built, irreg., & filthy; in this part are Christchurch & St. Patrick's cathedrals, both containing interesting monuments, the archbishop's palace, the royal & foundling hospitals. The N.W. quarter, much more regularly built than the foregoing, is principally inhabited by the trading & middle classes. On its outskirts are many good edifices, & here are the new house of industry, Richmond penitentiary, blue coat hospital, royal barracks, Smithfield and Ormond mkts., the linen hall, & the new courts of law erected on King's Inn quay. The E. quarters of Dublin are by far the handsomest; & the finest approach to the city is on the N.E. The quarter in this direction comprises Sackville street, one of the finest thoroughfares in Europe, & in which are the post-office & the rotunda; & in its centre, the Nelson pillar, a Doric column, 134 ft. in height, & surmounted by a statue; in this quarter are also the custom-house, and royal lying-in hospital, with Mountjoy & Rutland squares, & Marlboro' green. The S.E. quarter comprises St. Stephen's green, in which is the equestrian statue of George II., Merrion and Fitzwilliam squares, College-green, now a paved area, on which are the Bank of Ireland (formerly the parliament house), Trinity college, & a bronze statue of William III.; Dame street, Sir P. Dun's hospital, the Dublin royal society house, & the mansion house, near which is an equestrian statue of George I. Principal edifices not hitherto mentioned, comprise St. George's church with a steeple 200 feet in height, 29 other Protestant parochial churches, & as many chapels of ease, 9 Roman Catholic parochial churches, 7 friaries, 3 monasteries, 8 convents, numerous dissenting chapels, & a synagogue; the commercial buildings, corn exchange, royal hospital at Kilmainham, various barracks, the new inns of court, the co. infirmary, Richmond surgical, Dublin, St. Vincents, Steeven's, Mercer's, & several other general hospitals, many maternity hospitals, the general dispensary, Richmond lunatic asylum, numerous other charitable institutions, the city assembly house, corporate halls, sessions house, Newgate, & several other prisons, & three theatres. Dublin is decorated with several historical statues, besides those already named, & many of its public buildings are adorned with symbolical figures. Its university, chartered in 1591, is situated in Trinity coll., is attended by about 2,000 students, possesses a landed rev. of 15,000*l.* a-year, a library of 150,000 vols., a park, printing-house, anatomical & chemical departments, a botanic garden, & an observatory. Dublin has colleges of physicians & surgeons, an apothecaries' hall, royal Irish & Hibernian academies, a royal institution, zoological, geological, phrenological, agricultural, horticultural, & other societies; various clubs, & mechanics' institute. The zoological society has gardens in the Phœnix park, a fine open space at the W. extremity of the city, & in which is the Wellington testimonial, a heavy obelisk, raised at a cost of 20,000*l.* This park, the rotunda, and zoological gardens, are the favorite places of resort for the inhabitants. The villages, Ringsend, Irishtown, Sandymount, Ballsbridge, Donnybrook, Ranelagh, Rathmines, Harold's cross, Kilmainham, Glassnevin, Drumcondra, & Clontarf, are immediate suburbs of the city, the environs of which have much picturesque beauty. Dublin communicates with the W. of Irel. by the Grand & Royal canals, by railroad with Drogheda, Kingstown, & Limerick, & by steam packets with Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, Holyhead, Bristol, Cork, Plymouth, Southampton, London, & Havre. The Midland Great Western r. r. connects with Galway and Connaught; the Great Southern and Western r. r. connecting with Cork, Limerick, and the S.W. The Dublin and Kingstown r. r., 6 m. in length, has a S.E. direction from Dublin, & a continuation by an atmospheric line to Dalkey, 2 m. further S. Its harbor, which comprises an area of 3,030 ac., has been latterly much improved, and near the mouth of the Liffey, are the Grand canal & the custom-house docks, the latter occupying 8 acres; depth at low water 12 feet, at high tides 24 feet; the wharves & docks are accessible by vessels of 900 tons. Dublin had formerly important manufs. of woollen, silk, and cotton fabrics, but they have declined into insignificance, and at present its chief trade is in exports of linens, poplins, porter, provisions, &c. Its timber trade has very recently increased. The corp. consists of a Lord Mayor & 15 aldermen, & 45 town-councilors, elected out of the 15 municipal wards. Besides the Lord Mayor's weekly courts, here are courts of conscience for debts under 40*s.* Irish, & 5 manor courts; & Dublin is the seat of a chamber of commerce, and the ouzel galley society for the arbitration of commercial disputes. The see of the archbishop comprises the cos. Dublin & Wicklow, with part of Kildare, and his jurisdiction is nearly co-extensive with the provs. Leinster & Munster. Dublin is divided into 20 pas. & 15 municipal wards, with 15 aldermen, one of whom is chosen Lord Mayor, & 45 councillors; sends 2 mems. to H. of C.

DUBLIN BAY, an inlet of the Irish Sea, co. Dublin, betw. Howth head on the N., with Baily light-house, lat. 53° 21′ 40″ N., lon. 6° 3′ 5″ W., & Kingstown on the S., with the light-house, lat. 53° 18′ N., lon. 6° 8′ W. Its length & breadth of entrance are each about 7 m. Shores bold & highly picturesque. At its W. end is the mouth of the river Liffey, with Dublin harbor, & on its shores are the vills. Ratheny, Clontarf, Blackrock & Kingstown.

DUBLIN COUNTY, Ireland, Leinster, has E. the Irish Sea, & landward from S. round to N. the cos. Wicklow, Kildare, & Meath. Area, 354 sq. m., or 226,414 ac.; of which 196,063 ac. are arable, 19,312 do. uncultivated, 5,519 do. in plantations, & 1,820 do. towns, excluding Dublin city. Pop. 1851, 146,631, excluding the cap. Surface level or undulating; principal river the Liffey. Property much subdivided; near the cap. a good deal of it is laid out in market gardens. Fishing all along the coast is important; & manufacs. are more various than in any other part of Ireland. The co. is divided into 9 baronies; chief towns, after Dublin city, are Kingstown, Blackrock, Balbriggan, & Swords. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C.

Lat. of light-house, 56° 8′ N., lon. 2° 58′ W. Area of pa. 3,700 ac. Pop. of pa. 62,545. Pop. of parl. bor. 1851, 78,931, of royal burgh 61,526. Mean temp. of year, 51° .9°; winter, 41° .4; summer, 63° .4 Fahr. It stands mostly on the declivity between the river & Dundee-law, which has an elevation of 525 feet, up the sides of which, as also to the E. & W., it has of late considerably extended. It is irregularly built; some of its principal streets in the old town meet in a spacious market place, termed the cross; others extend along the shore. Principal edifices, a town hall, the new public seminaries, exchange coffee-room, trades' hall, Watt institution, St. Andrew's & some other churches, a great number of dissenting chapels, of Roman Catholic & Glassite are conspicuous, excellent barracks, the jail & bridewell, infirmary, lunatic asylum, dispensary, & numerous other charitable institutions. The most prominent object in the town, is the old square tower of the cathedral church, founded by David, Earl of Huntingdon, which rises to the height of 156 feet. The churches connected with this ancient tower, have suffered many dilapidations, and were nearly destroyed by fire in 1841. The Luckenbooth, at W. end of High street, now nearly demolished, was the birth-place of Anne of Buccleugh, Duchess of Monmouth, & the temporary residence of General Monk, & afterwards, in 1715, of the Pretender. Whitehall, an old building, now demolished, which stood near the Cross, was the scene of frequent conventions of estates & meetings of general assemblies of the Scottish Kirk. The town was formerly surrounded by fortified walls begun by the English & completed by the French in 1547, no vestige of these remain but the names of the gates. Dundee is the principal seat of the linen manufactures in Great Britain. Its fabrics consist of Osnaburghs, sheeting, duck & coarse linens generally; besides which, linen yarn, cotton-bagging, canvas, & cordage, are goods extensively manufactured. There are in the town & immediate vicinity, 47 spinning-mills, impelled by steam, producing 12,960,000 spindles of yarn annually, from 4,000 to 5,000 hands employed in weaving; estimated value of the manufactured goods exported, 1,900,000*l*. Kid glove-making, tanning, refining-sugar, iron working & machinery, & ship building, the last including the construction of iron steamers, are also important. Dundee has a tide-harbor, & several large wet docks, recently constructed at a great expense. Total shipping of port 1850, 342 vessels; aggregate burden 57,378 tons, many of which are employed in the whale fisheries & the Baltic & American trade. 3,815 vessels entered the port in 1850, registered tonnage 299,648. There are 3 local banks & a savings bank, & 4 weekly newspapers. This town communicates hourly by a steam ferry with Newport on the opposite shore of the Tay, & by r. r. with Edinburgh to the S., Arbroath, Montrose, &c., to the N.; with Perth, Cupar, Angus, Forfar, Newtyle, &c., by the Scottish Midland r. r.; also by steam with Newburgh, Perth, Aberdeen, Leith, Hull, & London. Previous to 1834, the town formed only one pa. It was then by act of assembly, divided into 12 quoad sacra pas. The municipal borough is divided into 3 districts, town council consisting of a provost, 4 bailies and ten councillors, including dean & guild. Since the Reform Act Dundee sends 1 member to House of Commons. Markets, Tuesday & Friday. Among its celebrated natives are Hector Boetius, Halliburton, who was the first openly to profess the reformed religion in Scotland, Sir George M'Kenzie, Lord Advocate, Fergusson the poet, & Admiral Lord Duncan. Sir Wm. Wallace was educated here.

It is generally handsome, though irregularly built, on an eminence separated from a large suburb on the W., by a ravine crossed by a bridge. Principal edifice, its fine collegiate church, erected in 1821, contiguous to the ruins of the ancient edifice. The abbey, originally founded by Malcolm & his Queen between 1070 & 1086, was a monastery of Culdees. Here Edward of England resided for some months in 1304, & on leaving it set it on fire. It was rebuilt by Bruce, & here his body was interred. In 1589, the abbey, with its lands, was erected into a temporal lordship, & conferred upon Anne of Denmark, wife of James VI. The nave & tower, and some parts of the refectory still remain, & are partly Saxon & partly Norman architecture. In the town are various other places of worship, a guildhall with a spire 132 feet in height, town hall & jail, several public schools, a flourishing mechanics' institute, several learned associations, & subscription libraries. The linen manufactures here dates from the 17th century, &, since 1778, the finest kinds of table linen, diapers, damasks, have been woven at Dunfermline, the finer yarns being supplied from Yorkshire & Ireland, & the rest from mills in the vicinity, & from Dundee, &c. The weavers work in their own houses; & there are in Dunfermline & its vicinity 3,600 looms, employing upwards of 5,000 persons, & estimated to produce goods to the annual value of 351,700*l*. Here are also some breweries, rope, tan, & soapworks, tobacco factories, and a steam-flour mill. Coal, lime, & iron, are raised in large quantities in the pa.; many of the collieries and lime works belong to the Earl of Elgin, who also owns a railroad, extending hence to Charleston, the port of Dunfermline on the Firth of Forth. The town, erected into a royal burgh in 1588, unites with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, & Queensferry, in sending 1 mem. to House of Commons. Adjoining the abbey was a palace, enlarged by James IV. in 1500, in which Chas. I. was born in 1600, & where Charles II., in 1650, subscribed the league & covenant.

Inhabited houses, 1851, 64,977. Pop. 390,997. Surface mountainous in the W., where the range has an elevation of 1,000 to 2,196 feet, whence several parallel hill ranges decline toward the coast, enclosing many fertile tracts. The river Tees forms the S. boundary, the Tyne the N.; the other rivers are the Wear, Sterne, & Derwent. Heaths occupy much of the W. portion, where, however, agriculture is most advanced. The valley of the Tees & eastern shores of the co. are composed of magnesian limestone, & new red sandstone, covering to a considerable depth the coal fields below. The W. part of the co. consists of mntn. limestone, rich in lead ore; greenstone & basalt dykes intersect the district. Climate healthy, air sharp & cool in the W., but milder near the shores. The Teeswater breed of short-horned cattle is deservedly famous. Sheep, chiefly Cheviots and Leicesters, are pretty numerous. Farms mostly small, but estates large; about one-third of the land in the county is estimated to belong to the bishopric. The Durham collieries are the most extensive & valuable in the kgdom.; near the coast are numer. coal mines; lead, iron, & grinding-stones are also highly important products. Manufactures very various, but, except ship-building at Sunderland & S. Shields, none are carried on extensively; in 1847 worsted and flax mills occupied 863 hands. All the E. part of the co. is intersected by railroads, & the Great N. of Engl. line traverses it from S. to W. Durham, as a co palatine, was formerly under the sovereignty of its bishop, most of whose jurisdiction has now merged in that of the crown. It is divided into the 4 wards of Chester, Easington, Darlington, & Stockton, & 60 pas. and 15 parochial chapelries in the diocese of Durham. Principal towns, Durham, Sunderland, Darlington, Gateshead, S. Shields, & Stockton. It sends in all 10 mems. to H. of C., 4 of whom are returned by the co. It gives the title of earl to the Lambton family. At the time of the Roman invasion the principal part of the co. was included in the territory of the Brigantes. Steam power is used in twenty of the establishments mentioned in the table, & several others are making preparations to use it. There were built in 1850 at the different ship-yards, 14 ships & barks, making an aggregate tonnage of 14,065 tons. East Boston, with its superior location for commercial & manufacturing purposes, will doubtless soon double its present population. It has a water frontage of 17,000 feet on the deep water of the harbor, as well adapted & better protected for commerce than wharves in the city proper. The Grand Junction Railroad unites East Boston with all the principal roads from the city, thus affording an unbroken chain of railroad communication from the deep water wharves in this section of the city through the great manufacturing districts of New England to the Canadas, the lakes, & the great West, greatly to the advantage of the commerce of Boston, by bringing to & taking from the ships & warehouses all merchandise intended for the interior, & products & manufactures destined for shipment, free from expense of transhipment. East Boston was formerly known as Maverick's, Noddle's, & Williams' Island. In 1814 the citizens of Boston erected a fort on its eastern extremity, which was called Fort Strong. In 1830, some eight or ten of our most enterprising capitalists purchased this island, & commenced laying it out into streets & lots, with a view of making it an important part of the city. Among the important improvements in that portion of the city termed East Boston are the introduction of the Cochituate water by the city of Boston, the construction of the Grand Junction Railroad, & the construction of the sea-wall across the Basin, thus reclaiming a large quantity of low lands which were hitherto partially covered by the tide-waters. These lands consist of marsh and flats to the extent of about ninety-five acres, lying between Westwood Island & the Eastern Railroad.

ECUADOR (Equator), REPUBLIC OF, an indep. state of S. America, mostly between lat. 1° 40′ N., & 5° 50′ S., & lon. 69° & 81° 20′ W., having N. New Granada, E. Brazil, S. Peru, & W. the Pacific Ocean. Length 830 m.; breadth 510 m. Area variously estimated from 212,000 to 325,000 sq. m. Estimated pop. from 550,000 to 600,000. Its W. part comprises the great chain of the Andes, which here attains nearly its highest elevation, in the summits of Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Antisana, Cayambe. On the E. the country descends into the vast central plain of the continent, & is traversed by the upper course of the Amazon, & its tributaries, the Putomayo, Nafo, Pastaça, Macas, Huallaga & Ucayale. W. of the Andes the Guayaquil, Esmerelda & Mira rivers flow into the ocean. The temp. of Quito & the more elevated table-lands, varies only between 58°.2 & 61°.3 Fahr. during all the year. Mean ann. temp. 61°. In the low valleys the temperature is much higher. Along the coast, from Gulf of Guayaquil to Cape San Lorenzo, rain rarely or never falls. The valleys of Daüli & Guayaquil have regular rainy & dry seasons, & in the valley of the Amazon it rains almost daily, with excessive heat. Principal products are cacao, cotton, coffee, sugar, maize, yams, tabacco, corn, & fruits, of both tropical & temperate regions; wheat is raised in the elevated plains. In the S. extremity of the Andes are extensive forests, & the Cinchona bark trees is common; the plains yield wax, gums, resins & sarsaparilla. Turtles abound in the Amazon, & fish, especially the manta, are plentiful on the shores of the Pacific. Gold is abundant in the sands of almost all the rivers, & the contributions of the Indians of the interior are mostly paid in gold dust. Lead & quicksilver are also plentiful; but few, if any, mines are wrought. Sulphur is abundant near Chimborazo. Woollen cloths & cotton goods are manuf. Ecuador is divided into 3 deps., which are subdivided into 8 provs., viz., Assuay into the provs. of Cuenca, Soja, & Jaen de Bracamores; Ecuador into Chimborazo, Imbambura, & Pichincha; & Guayaquil, into Guayaquil & Manaba. Principal cities & towns, Quito, the cap., Riobamba, Ambato, Baëza, Harra, Otavalo, Puno, Maynas, Cuença, Loxa, & Guayaquil, which last is the great emporium of the foreign trade. Ecuador, which once formed part of the empire of the Incas, was discovered by Pizarro in 1526, & was held under the Spanish crown till 1812, when a revolution occurred which ended in the establishment of the republic. In 1821, New Grenada & Venezuela united, & formed one republic, under the name of Columbia; but this union was dissolved in 1831, when the countries again separated, & Ecuador disconnected itself from New Grenada. The republic is governed by a president, chosen for 8 years, a vice-president, council of state, senate, & house of representatives, with 1 member for every 40,000 inhabitants. The pop. consists of the descendants of Spaniards, & of aboriginal Indians and Meztizos. There are very few negroes. In the W. mountainous region the natives are Peruvians, and are agriculturists & mechanics. The Indians of the plains are chiefly hunters & fishers.

EDINBURGH, a city, parl. bor., & the metropolis of Scotland, is situated on the S. bank of the estuary of the Forth, in lat. 55° 57′ 3″ N., lon. 3° 11′ W., 392 m. N. of London. Pop. in 1801 (including Leith), 82,560. In 1851, of city & suburbs, 160,302. The city is most picturesquely situated upon two ridges of hills. Elev. of High Street, at Tron Church, 255 ft.; do. of Register House, 217 ft. The old town occupies the more elevated ridge which terminates on the W. by the bold rocky eminence of the Castle Hill (elev. 383 feet). Between the old & new town is a deep ravine, now converted into gardens, & crossed on the E. by a spacious bridge, & communicating about the centre by an earthen mound. The new town extends to the N. of the old, and forms an extensive parallelogram, with wide and straight streets intersecting each other at right angles, & relieved at certain places by squares, a circus, & a spacious octagon. To the S. of the old town extends the rural suburbs of Newington & Morningside. The principal feature in the old town is the long spacious High Street, which, with the Canongate, extends along the elevated ridge from the Castle on the W. to Holyrood Palace on the E., with narrow wynds or closes on each side. The houses on this part, built on the old continental system, are very lofty, & each story divided into distinct dwelling apartments or flats. In this line of streets are the High Church of St. Giles, built in the cathedral style, with a tower in the form of an imperial crown; the Tron Church; the Assembly Hall, with a spire 238¾ ft. high; the Parliament House, containing the old parliament hall, with oaken roof, built 1632, & the various courts of justice, advocates' and writers' libraries, & Royal Exchange. At the E. extremity of Canongate, in the valley between Arthur Seat & Calton Hill, are situated the abbey and palace of Holyrood, founded in 1128 by David I. The ruins of the choir of the ancient abbey remain; and the tower of the N. W. corner of the palace, built 1528 by James V., and containing Queen Mary's apartments, have been preserved & incorporated with the more modern buildings erected after the restoration in 1671. The castle, built on a precipitous rock of basaltic greenstone, contains some ancient apartments, the crown & regalia of Scotland, an armory, & barracks for soldiers. The university, founded 1580, by charter of James VI., is a noble institution. The building, founded 1789, forms a large quadrangle, with a spacious court in the centre, & contains a library with 90,854 printed books and 310 MSS., museum & class-rooms for the professors, who amount in number to 31, & who deliver courses of lectures on literature & science, theology, law, medicine, agriculture, and music. Annual average of students, 1,636. There is also a Free Church College, & a Theological College of United Presbyterians; a college of physicians and of surgeons, with a handsome hall and an anatomical museum, the royal society, Highland & agricultural society, society of arts, antiquarian soc., royal academy of painting; a botanic garden, originally founded in 1670, and reconstructed in its present position in 1824; the high school, an elegant building on the Calton Hill, a naval & military academy, new Edinburgh academy, several other schools for the instruction of youth, a mechanics' institute, school of design and philosophic institution, united service & new clubs. The most remarkable public buildings of the new town are the royal institution, adorned with a statue of her Majesty Queen Victoria, St. George's and St. Andrew's churches, Lord Melville's monument, 139 feet high, Sir Walter Scott's monument, the national monument on the Calton Hill, an astronomical observatory, general post-office & stamp-office on Waterloo Place. Edinburgh is divided into 17 pas., and 13 quoad sacra pas. Besides these there are Free Church congregations, 14 United Presbyterian, 9 Episcopalian, 2 Roman Catholic chapels & nunnery, 3 Independent, sevl. Baptists, a Methodist, Society of Friends, & other churches. The charitable institutions are—Trinity hospital, founded in 1461 by Mary of Gueldres, consort of James II.; eight institutions for education and maintenance of children; the orphan hospital, George Heriot's hospital, founded 1624—a very wealthy institution; Watson's hospital, Gillespie's do., the merchant maiden, trades maiden, & orphan hospitals, Donaldson's hospital, Stewart's hospital, an asylum for the blind, deaf & dumb institution, a royal infirmary, receiving from 3,000 to 4,000 patients annually, & several public dispensaries; night asylum for the houseless poor, & house of refuge. There are 3 poor's houses & 2 ragged schools connected with the city & suburbs. The principal banking establishments are the Bank of Scotland, Royal Bank, British Linen Co., Commercial, National, Edinburgh and Glasgow, Union and Clydesdale, City of Glasgow, Western, and a savings' bank. Edinburgh has never been famous as a manufacturing city, it contains few general merchants, its trade being chiefly retail; but Leith, which may be considered its seaport, holds a conspicuous rank for its extensive shipping, &c. Coach building, flint glass making, and strong ale brewing, are its chief manufs. It has long held a high standing as a printing and publishing centre, with engraving, book-binding, and those trades connected with literature. There are 10 newspapers published in the city, 1 of which is published three times a week and 6 twice a week; 6 quarterly reviews, literary, scientific, religious, and medical; 6 monthly magazines, and various other periodical works. Edinburgh is the central point where the great lines of railroad meet, and a part of the new town is traversed by an extensive tunnel of the Northern r. r. The elevated situation of the city allows of a free ventilation; and the supply of water brought from the Pentlands, 8 m. S.W., is now abundant. Mean temperature of the year 47°.1 Fahr.; mean of summer heat, 57°.2; winter, 38°.4. Annual fall of rain, 24 inches. In 1841, the annual registered mortality of the city was 3,507, making the deaths in the proportion of 1 to 36·45. The climate of Edinburgh is reckoned salubrious, & is comparatively dry and mild. The varied beauty of the scenery of the vicinity is unrivalled. From the Calton Hill & summit of Arthur Seat, is obtained an extensive view of the plains of Mid-Lothian, the Lammermoor & Pentland Hills, the blue waters of the Firth of Forth, the neighboring shores of Fife, & the distant Ochill Hills; the situation of the city, amidst surrounding scenery, bearing in many respects a resemblance to that of Athens.

The city is governed by a Lord Provost, elected for 3 years, who is also high sheriff of the royalty, lord lieutenant of co. of the city, & admiral of Firth of Forth, & has precedence of all official persons within his jurisdiction, 4 bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, & council; the whole amounting to 33. There is a guildry & merchant company, & 14 incorporated trades. The city is divided into 5 wards. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Annual revenue of city about 25,000*l*. The court of sessions, or supreme civil & criminal court for Scotland, is composed of 13 judges, 5 of whom sit as lord ordinaries, to decide causes in the first instance, & 4 sit in each of the two divisions of the inner house. The court of justiciary is composed of the Lord Justice-General, the Lord Justice-Clerk, & 5 lords commissioners. The faculty of advocates (barristers) consists of advocates who have the privilege of pleading causes before the court of session. The advocates' library contains 148,000 printed volumes, & 2,000 MSS. The society of writers to the signet, who have also a large library, practise as agents or attornies before the court of session. The solicitors is another society who practise before the supreme courts, but with inferior privileges to the W.S. There are also the sheriff court, justice of peace court, &c. The Register House, an elegant building E. end of Princes Street, erected in 1774, with an equestrian statue of Wellington in front, contains the public records, & records of landed property, for Scotland, under the direction of the lord register & clerks of court of session. The police establishment & society of high constables, form an effective protection for the peace of the city. The prisons for the city & co. are situated S. of the Calton Hill, & are under excellent regulation.

Simeon of Durham, writing in the year 854, mentions the fortress or castle under the name of Edwinesburch, or castle of Edwin, probably so called after Edwin, Prince of Northumberland. In 1128 the town received a charter from David I. In 1215, Alexander II., son of William the Lion, held a parliament here for the first time. After this it frequently became the residence of the Kings of Scotland, & latterly the permanent seat of the Scottish parliament, courts of justice, & executive government.

EDINBURGH CENTRE, p. o., Saratoga co. N. Y.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or MID-LOTHIAN, is situated in the eastern part of the S. division of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Firth of Forth, on the E. by Haddington & Berwick shires, S. by Peebles and Selkirk shires, & W. by Linlithgowshire. Extreme length W. to E. 38 m.; average breadth 15 m. Area, 397 sq. m., or 254,300 ac. Pop. 1851, 259,435. Inhabited houses 20,946. The S.E. part of the co. is intersected by the Moorfoot hills, a branch of the Lammermoors, of greywacké or lower silurian formation. From the S.W., the Pentland range runs toward the N.E., composed of porphyry, while the greenstone hills of Corstorphine extend from the Firth of Forth S.ward, & are continued by the greenstone & basaltic elevations of the castle rock, Arthur's Seat, & Calton, in the vicinity of the capital. Carnethy, the most elevated of the Pentland range, is 1,802 feet above the sea. From the S. the co. gradually slopes towards the borders of the Firth, & on the E. & W. extends into level and fertile plains. The principal rivs., none of which are large, are the Water of Leith, flowing along the N.W. declivity of the Pentlands, till it joins the Firth at Leith. The Esk, deriving its origin by two branches N. & S., in the southern part of the same mountain range, uniting to the E. of Dalkieth, and joining the sea at Musselburgh. The Almond, flowing through the N.W. valley of the co., & the Tyne, taking its origin from the Moorfoot hills, & flowing E. into Haddingtonshire. The greater part of the co. belongs to the coal formation, & coal is extensively wrought. A belt about 15 m. in length & 8 m. in breadth, extends across the district from Carlops to Musselburgh, containing 33 seams, from 9 inches to 6 feet thick, partly horizontal & partly edge. Sandstone of a very superior quality abounds, & is extensively quarried at Craigleith, Granton, & Hailes. Limestone is found in many localities, especially at Gilmerton, Crichton, & Burdiehouse. Slight indications of lead & copper have been noticed, but no metal is wrought except iron, which exists as ironstone in the coal strata. The co. is chiefly agricultural, & farming is conducted on the best modern principles. In the vicinity of the metropolis, extensive nurseries & vegetable & fruit gardens are established. There are extensive paper mills on the Esk, & Water of Leith, & several distilleries, breweries, potteries, but no other manufs. of importance. The Edinburgh & Glasgow, N. British, & Caledonian, & Edinburgh, & Northern railroads traverse the co. Edinburgh, the cap., is the only royal burgh. Dalkeith is a burgh of barony, & Musselburgh a burgh of regality. Principal vills., Portobello, Newhaven, Lasswade, Loanhead, Ratho, Penicuick, Roslin, &c. Leith is the principal seaport, & Granton is an excellent steam-boat harbor. The co. (exclusive of Edinburgh & suburbs) contains 29 pas. & 5 quoad sacra do. It sends, bors. included, 4 mems. to H. of C. Polling-places, Edinburgh, Dalkeith, & Mid-Calder. Mid-Lothian & the surrounding districts, at the period of the Roman conquest, was formed into the prov. of Valentia. EGYPT, Ægyptus, the Misraim of Scripture, and Massr of the Arabs, a country of N.E. Africa, situated between lat. 23° 50′ & 31° 35′ N., & lon. 25° & 34° E.; bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Isthmus of Suez & the Red Sea, S. by Nubia, & W. by Barbary & the Sahara. Length N. to S., 520 m.; breadth undefined. Area uncertain. Pop. 2,000,000. Cap. Cairo. The territory of Egypt is composed of a long narrow valley, enclosed by a double range of hills, which extend from Assouan to Cairo, & traversed by the Nile. N. of Cairo, where the mountains terminate, the Nile separates into numerous branches, of which the two principal flow, the one N.E., & the other N. W., to the Mediterranean, enclosing a triangular space, having the sea for its base, & called the Delta from its resemblance to the Greek letter Δ. These mountain chains, which defend the valley of the Nile from the sands of the surrounding desert, rise to a height of about 2,000 feet in the vicinity of Thebes; in many places they are merely low hills stretching into the desert. On the E. of the Nile the range terminates abruptly in Jebel Mokkatam, near Cairo, & runs E. towards the Isthmus of Suez. On the E. of the Nile the desert is mountainous, & traversed by ravines and valleys, the most remarkable of which form the caravan routes between Cairo & Suez, & between Kenneh and Cosseir. The desert of Libya contains many oases, which owe their fertility to the lowness of their situation, enabling them to retain moisture. In the N. of the Lybian desert are 2 contiguous valleys, enclosed by branches of the W. mountains, in one of which, called the "valley of the Natron lakes," are found small pools, which in winter exude a liquid of a violet-red color, to the height of 6 or 8 feet. This, when evaporated by the heat of the sun, leaves the substance called natron, a mixture of marine salt & sulph. of soda. The principal lakes are Birket-el-Keroun or lake Mœris in Middle Egypt, & Mareotis, Bourlos, and Menzaleh, in Lower Egypt, which last are shallow lagoons, separated from the Mediterranean by numerous peninsulas of sand. The climate of Egypt is characterized by extreme dryness, which is evinced by the perfect preservation of the colors & the sculptured surfaces of the temples on the banks of the Nile. There are but two seasons, the temperate, which lasts from October to March, & the hot season, from March to Sept. The heat, during the day, is excessive in summer, owing to the confined position of the country, & the lowness of its surface; but the nights are cool and agreeable. In winter the weather is mild & pleasant. At Cairo, lat. 30° 3′ N., the mean temp. of the year is 72°.2; winter, 58°.4; summer, 85°.1; & at Kenneh, lat. 26° 10′ N., mean temp. of year 79°.9; winter, 63°.6; summer, 92°, Fahr. Upper & Middle Egypt are more healthy than the Delta. On the subsiding of the inundation, fevers, dysentery, & ophthalmia prevail over the whole country. N. & N.W. winds blow permanently during the progress of the sun towards the Tropic of Cancer; but, on his return to the Tropic of Capricorn, it varies between S.E. & W. During the spring equinox, the country is visited by the pestilential wind called Simoom or Khamsin, a hot S.S.W. wind of 50 days' duration, when the diseases peculiar to the country assume their greatest virulence. The mirage occurs on the extensive plains after the surface has been heated by the sun, on which occasion the country appears like a vast lake studded with islands. Rain is unknown in Upper Egypt; in the Delta it falls frequently from Nov. to March. Showers are slight and unfrequent at Cairo, yet in 1824 rain fell continuously for 8 days, & caused the destruction of several houses. During the French scientific expedition, the number of rainy days was fifteen, & the latest observations give thirteen in a year in Lower Egypt. Fogs are rare, but very dense when they do occur. Snow never falls except in the vicinity of the coast, & then in very small quantity. In 1833 snow fell at Alexandria, Rosetta, & Atfeh, to the amazement of the inhabitants, to whom the phenomenon was totally unknown. With the exception of the oases, the fertility of Egypt is confined to the valley inundated by the Nile, in the Delta, & a space of from 5 to 25 m. on the banks of the river, in Middle & Upper Egypt. The soil is composed of successive deposits of earth brought down by the river, & enveloping the sands of the desert. The Nile regularly inundates its valley for several months in the year. This periodic inundation commences in June, & attains its maximum height in Sept. After having remained stationary for several days, the waters subside, & disappear at the end of Nov. The distribution of the water is favored by the slightly convex form of the central valley of the Nile, & is assisted by lateral canals. On the left or west side of the river, the chief of these is the canal of Joseph, which feeds the ancient lake Mœris, at the bottom of the fertile valley of Fayoum. As a potable water, that of the Nile is reckoned the best in the world. Egypt has no metals, & the only minerals are natron, saltpetre, salt, marble, & the celebrated red granite called "Syene marble," employed in the construction of the pyramids, & in many of the monuments of Italy; the principal quarries are situated in the mountains of Upper Egypt. Emeralds are found in the mountains on the shore of the Red Sea, but the mines are abandoned. The cultivation of the soil is divided into that of the low grounds, or those watered naturally, & the high grounds, which depend for their productiveness on artificial inundations; the greater part of Upper Egypt is thus watered, & many means have been employed to facilitate the process. In ancient times lake Mœris was formed for a reservoir; & a complete barrage of the Nile, now in progress, promises greatly to augment the fertility of the soil. The plants peculiar to Egypt comprise the lotus, the papyrus (from which the first substance used for writing upon was made), the zizyphus, & many aromatic plants. The date palm flourishes to the lat. of Thebes, & on its fruit many of the inhabitants of Upper Egypt depend for nourishment. Egypt has always been considered one of the most fertile countries in the world. The chief cultivated plants are cotton, lint, hemp, indigo, sugar, tobacco, opium; the principal grains are millet, maize, wheat, & rice. Durrah (Sorghum Vulgare) forms a chief article of nourishment. The cereals of Egypt have always been celebrated; & onions, melons, cucumbers, are extensively used. The vine, widely cultivated in ancient times—extirpated by the Mussulmans—has been again introduced, & its cultivation actively promoted by the late Mehemet Ali. The fruit trees comprise those of tropical countries; those of Europe do not flourish; numerous plantations of mulberries have been made by Mehemet Ali; there are no forests; & sycamores & palms are thinly distributed. Among wild animals are the hippopotamus, crocodile, ichneumon, jerboa, & the fox; the domestic animals comprise the ox & buffalo, horse, ass, mule, camel, and dromedary. Among birds are the ibis, celeb. in antiq., the vulture, pelican, plover, bittern, & quail, which arrive in great flights from the interior of Africa. The rearing of fowls, pigeons and bees, is an important branch of industry among the peasantry, who hatch eggs by means of artificial heat. Fish is abundant in the lakes of the Delta & in the Nile, the salmon of which is excellent. Reptiles are numerous; and sponges, coral, the polypus, madrepores, are found on the shores of the Red Sea. The manufactures of Egypt are almost entirely monopolized by the government. In 1839, there were upwards of 20 cotton-spinning factories distributed through the different towns. There are large dyeing & printing works at Cairo; woollen cloths for military clothing are manufd. at Boulac, where there is an extensive iron-foundry. Carpets are made at Benisouef, red caps at Foulah, and fire-arms and military accoutrements at Cairo. [Boulac.—Cairo.] The principal manufs. of the natives are of woollen cloths (which, however, have lost their ancient renown), pottery-ware, and carpets. The trade with Europe is carried on thro' Alexandria. The traffic with the interior of Africa is carried on by means of caravans, which bring, in exchange for European & Egyptian products, ivory, gold-dust, skins, wool, gum, ostrich feathers, & metals. The chief commercial relations with Arabia & India are carried on by Cosseir and Suez. Since the establishment of regular steam-packets in the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean, Egypt has become the route to India for all the correspondence of Europe, as well as for the greater portion of travellers. The principal means of communication at present are the Nile, which is traversed by steam packets, & the canals, many of which have been repaired by Mehemet Ali; but even the best of them are often innavigable during a great part of the year. The route from Cairo to Suez (180 m.) is traversed by horses and vans, & the mail is conveyed in 18 hours. The project of uniting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea, by re-opening the anc. canal, has been recently revived, but it is surrounded with difficulties, and not likely to be carried into effect. The more practicable & safe plan of a rail r. communication between Cairo & Suez has been resolved on, and a portion of it built. This may again render Egypt the principal entrepôt of commerce between the E. and the W. worlds. Egypt was one of the earliest civilized countries in the world. It is believed that a colony of Ethiopians first introduced a form of religion, & the art of cultivating the soil. The empire was greatly extended under Sesostris and Rameses; it was subjugated by Cambyses, King of Persia, 525 B.C. At that time it was occupied by an industrious population, had numerous cities and monuments of astonishing grandeur—of which the pyramids still exist,—the obelisks, many of which were carried to Rome & Paris, and numerous temples and palaces. For 24 centuries it has been subjected to foreign domination, and has fallen successively into misery & ignorance. It was taken by Alexander in 332; after his death it formed a separate kgdm. under the Ptolemies, till the year 30 B.C. Augustus then reduced it to a Roman province. The Mohammedan Arabians seized it in the 7th century. The Caliphs possessed it for 2 centuries. In 1250 it came into the power of the Mamelukes, who were subjected to the Turks at the commencement of the 16th century. The French conquered it in 1798; in 1802 they were driven from it by the English, & in 1811 Mehemet Ali rendered himself master of the country by the massacre of the Mamelukes. By a judicious government and great reforms, Egypt under Mehemet Ali has made rapid progress in civilization; he has added to his territory Nubia, Kordafan, & part of Abyssinia; he had also extended his dominion over Syria, Crete, and part of Arabia, but in 1840 he was deprived of all his Asiat. possessions. By the treaty of London, 15th July, 1841, the government is hereditary among the descendants of Mehemet Ali. Egypt comprises the provinces of Saïd, or Upper Egypt; Vostani, or Middle Egypt; & Bahari, or Lower Egypt. These are divided into 7 intendencies, which are subdivided into departments and arronds. Besides the governors of these divisions, the Fellahs have preserved their hereditary sheiks. The highest tribunals are those of the cadis; inferior causes are judged without appeal by the magistrates. In the absence of an official census, the following estimate of the pop. is based on a recent official return of the number of houses, allowing 8 persons to each house in Cairo, and 4 for the rest of the country:—Egyptian Mussulmans, 2,600,000; do. Copts, 150,000; Osmanli Turks, 12,000; Bedwin Arabs, 70,000; Barbaras, 5,000; negroes, 20,000; Abyssinians, 5,000; Circassian and Georgian slaves, 5,000; Jews, 7,000; Syrians, 5,000; Armenians, 2,000; Grecks, 5,000; Europeans domiciled in Egypt, about 9,500. The chief cities are Cairo & Alexandria. The largest pyramids are near Gizeh, 7 m. S.W. Cairo, but others occur at intervals on and near the lt. b. of the Nile, over a space of 70 m.; the greatest temples and sculptures are found on the site of Thebes, and at Edfou, Denderah, &c. The chief establishment of public instruction is the University of El-Agha at Cairo. Mehemet Ali has establd. schools of medicine, languages, and agriculture—military and naval schools. The most of the primary schools & the libraries are dependant on the mosques. The Egyptian army, also created by Mehemed Ali, is raised by conscription. In 1841 it comprised 58 regiments, with 148,032 regular troops, of whom 11,644 are cavalry, besides irregular troops, national guards, & a battalion of laborers & workers in the arsenal—in all, 146,341 men. The fleet consists of 7 line-of-battle ships, 6 frigates, 4 corvettes, 7 brigs, 2 steam packets, 23 transports. Public revenue in 1833 amounted to 2,225,725*l.*, chiefly derived from the land & capitation taxes, and from the Pacha's monopoly on raw & manuf. goods. Expenditure same year 2,102,525*l.* Exports 1851, valued at 325,804,695 Egyptian piastres; imports same year, 230,000,000 piastres. Egypt has no public debt.

Pop. of do. 1851, 7,277; of bor. 6,337. Mean annual temp. 47° .7, Fahr. Annual rain 24 inches. The town is situated in a fertile valley anciently called "the garden of Scotland," & extends about a mile in length along the rt. b. of the Lossie, with the suburban vill. of Bishopmill on the left. About the beginning of the present century, the town still retained the antiquated and stately aspect of an ancient ecclesiastical metropolis; but more recently, most of the old houses have given place to modern structures. It contains a neat modern church in centre of the high street, occupying the locality of old St. Giles', a modern court-house & prison, Gray's hospital or infirmary on elevated ground to the W., endowed with 26,000*l.*, to which is attached a lunatic asylum; an orphan institution, endowed (1832) with 70,000*l.*, by General Anderson, a native of the town, & who left it for India a private soldier. There is an English chapel, free church, and several other churches. A literary & scientific institution with museum, assembly rooms, public fountain. There is also an excellent academy. Trades schools & infant school; some ancient alms-houses, & other charities for the poor. The ruins of the cathedral, by far the most extensive & beautiful of any ancient Scottish remains, are on the N.E. side of the High Street. The cathedral was founded in 1224 by bishop Andrew Moray, was burned 1390 by the Wolfe of Badenoch, & rebuilt by bishop Barr. It is in the form of a cross, 289 feet in length; breadth of transept 120 feet; height of two western towers, between which is the grand entrance, 83 feet. The great central tower & spire which fell in 1711 was 198 feet high. The chapter house is entire & highly ornamented. The architecture is a mixture of Saxon & middle Gothic. An ancient wall enclosed a space of ground called "the college," in which resided the dignitaries of the cathedral. Several of the old mansions still remain entire. There are remains of a monastery of Grey Friars, & a conical eminence called Lady hill, the ruins of an ancient castle or stronghold of the Earls of Moray, on which is now erected a pillar to the memory of the late Duke of Gordon. Elgin is supposed to have derived its name from Helgy a Norwegian general, & was created a royal burgh by William I. Along with Banff, Cullen, Inverury, Kintore, & Peterhead, it returns 1 mem. to H. of C. Here is held the sheriff & head burgh court of co. Market-days, Tuesday & Friday, & 9 annual fairs. In the vicinity is Grant Lodge, a seat of the Earl of Seafield. The Earl of Elgin derives his title from this town. The beautiful & secluded valley of Pluscardine, in S.W. of pa., contains the ruins of Pluscardine priory, founded in 1230 by Alexander II.; it is a model of Melrose on a smaller scale, & less ornamented, but of beautiful proportions, & simple style of architecture. The church walls are pretty entire, & the refectory has been fitted up as a chapel of ease for the S.W. part of this extensive parish.

The surface is elevated in the N. & W. where it borders on Wales; a region in the centre gently undulating; & along the eastern shores, extending into alluvial plains & low lying marsh ground. The principal summits are in the N., where Scafell rises to an elevation of 3,166 feet, Helvellyn to 3,055 feet. A mountain range there, continuous with ranges in S. Scotland, mostly separates the counties Northumberland, Durham, & York on the E., from Cumberland, Westmoreland, & Lancashire W.ward; & continuing S.ward through the cos. Derby & Warwick, unites itself to the high lands of the S. by the Coteswold hills (Gloucestershire); having separated the basins of the rivers Tyne, Tees, Humber, Trent, & Thames, from those of the Severn, Mersey, & Eden. The mountain system of S. England has its centre in Salisbury Plain & Marlborough Downs (Wiltshire), whence proceed two long chains, the S. & N. Downs, through the cos. Hants, Sussex, Surrey, & Kent; a third range N. of the Thames, & which in the cos. Oxford & Bucks receives the name of the Chiltern hills; some ranges further N.E.ward; & a prolongation to the S.W.; the last in the centre of Devonshire, expands into the region of Dartmoor, where Cawsand hill has an elev. of 1,782 feet. Principal rivers are the Severn, Medway, Dee, Mersey, on the W. coast; & the Thames, Trent, Humber, Tyne, on the E. Besides these there are on the N., Ouse, Derwent, Aire, Don, & Wharf, all tributaries to the Humber: the Wear & Coquet farther N., & the Nen, S. Ouse, Waveney, Stour, & Medway, all disemboguing on the E.; the Wye, Usk, Teme, & Upper & Lower Avon, affls. of the Severn, besides the Ribble, Parrott, Taw, & Torridge, entering the sea on the W.; & the Tamar, Dart, Exe, Frome, Stour, Hampshire—Avon, Anton, & Arun, on the S. coast. Lakes are mostly confined to Cumberland, Westmoreland, & Lancashire, where are Winder-Mere, Ulleswater, Derwent, Bassenthwaite, & Conistone Waters, deservedly renowned for picturesque beauty. In the S., Whittlesen-Mere (Huntingdonshire), is the only collection of fresh water deserving notice.

The coasts of England are extremely irregular, and abound with inlets. On the W. are Morecambe bay, the estuaries of the Ribble, Mersey, Dee, & Severn, & Bideford bay; & on this side of the island are the important harbs. of Liverpool, Preston, Whitehaven, Bristol, & Glo'ster. On the S. coast are the harbs. of Falmouth, Plymouth, Dartmouth, Torquay, Exmouth, Weymouth, Poole, Southampton, & Portsmouth. On the E. are the Wash, & the estuaries of the Thames, Orwell, Humber, & Tees, & the ports of Dover, Harwich, Ipswich, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Scarboro', Whitby, Stockton, Hartlepool, Shields, Sunderland, Newcastle, & Berwick.

The geological structure of England, commencing on the W., consists of the Silurian system of rocks which form the country bordering on Wales, & extend into that principality. This system is composed of clay, slates, & greywacké, intersected in various places by porphyries & other greenstone rocks. To this succeeds the Devonian or old red sandstone, which prevails through the cos. of Hereford, Monmouth, Devon, & Cornwall. The midland part of England, commencing at Berwick in the N., has a basis of mountain limestone, which extends S. & W., with some interruptions, into Devonshire, & contains the principal lead mines. Above this lie the great coal formations, commencing in Northumberland, & extending through Durham, W. Yorkshire, Lancashire, Staffordshire, into S. Wales. Above the coal deposits lie the new red sandstone & magnesian limestone, in some localities abounding in salt & gypsum. East of the coal & sandstone districts, in a waving line from Whitby to the S. coast of Dorset, extend the Lias & Oolite. These are succeeded eastward by green sand & chalk, & the Wealden beds of Sussex. Diluvial clays & tertiary formations constitute the Norfolk & Suffolk districts, & basins of the Thames & S. Hampshire. [BRITAIN, CORNWALL, WALES.] The following table exhibits the mean annual temperature of England:—

The prevailing winds for the summer, autumn, and part of winter, are S.W. & W. In spring & other portions of the year, dry & scorching E. & N.E. winds are common. Most rain falls in summer & autumn. The greatest annual amount of rain falls in Cumberland (amounting to 51 inches), & in the W. coast generally. The least annual amount on the E. coasts (from 20 to 25 inches). Mean annual fall of rain about 31 inches. From the year 1838 to 1845 there were in the pop. of England 1 in 64 persons married, one birth in every 31, one death in every 46, & an average of five children to each marriage.

Estates & farms vary very much in size; but throughout the major part of the country, landed property is very much divided; & 200*l.* has been loosely estimated as the average value of estates. In 1852 the total annual value of property in England assessed to the property tax amounted to 231,767,168*l.*; & in 1831 it was found that about 834,000 families were wholly or chiefly supported by the cultivation of the soil. Agriculture, in some of the E. counties, has attained great superiority, and, throughout England generally, it is better conducted than in most parts of Europe, though in many districts, particularly in the W., it is backward. Wheat is the principal crop, especially in the E. & S.E. cos.: barley is raised chiefly in the central cos., & oats in the N., though they are cultivated more or less in all parts of the country. Peas, beans, potatoes, & turnips, are the crops next in importance. Rye & buckwheat are only partially cultivated: rape, flax, hemp, & mangel-wurzel, are only cultivated in certain parts. Hops are nearly confined to Kent, Herefordshire, & the vicinity of Farnham in Surrey, & the total number of acres in cultivation in in 1852 was 46,158: the number of pounds charged with duty was 56,102,494. Adjacent to the large towns, a good deal of the land is commonly laid out in kitchen gardens, & in Bedfordshire an extensive district is appropriated to raising vegetables for the London markets. In the S.W. cos. large quantities of apples are produced, & Devon & Hereford are famous for their cider. Perry is made chiefly in Worcestershire; & mead in many of the cos. contiguous to Wales. The grape does not flourish so as to produce wine; beer & ale being universally the popular beverages which supply its place.

A full half of the cultivable lands are estimated to be in meadows & pasturage: & hay forms an important crop, for which Middlesex & the adjacent cos. are especially famous. The stock of horses (in England and Wales) has been lately estimated at 1,500,000; 2-3ds of which are employed in farm labor. Among the rest, a considerable proportion are partially or wholly descended from the English race-horse, a noble breed, originally derived from crossings of the Arab, Persian, and Barbary breeds. Horned cattle are estimated at 4,000,000, 1-4th of which stock is annually slaughtered; of these the Lancashire, Holderness, Northumberland, Durham, Devon, Hereford, Sussex, & Suffolk, are the chief breeds; in addition to which, many have of late been introduced from Guernsey, Alderney, &c. Butter is a highly important product in Essex, Cambridgshire, & Dorset. Cheese in Cheshire, Gloucester, Wilts, Leicestershire, & Devonshire. The number of sheep has been estimated at 26,000,000. The long-woolled comprise the Romney-marsh, Tees-water, Lincoln, & New Leicester breeds; & the short-woolled, the South Down, Dorset, Wilts, & Hereford. Total annual produce of wool in England has been estimated at 470,000 packs, of 240 lbs. each (upwards of 1,000,000 cwt.). Hogs are very generally kept, & are especially numerous in the forest lands of Hants, Berks, Gloucester, & Hereford, the former of which cos. are as famous for their bacon, as Yorkshire & Westmoreland are for their hams. Geese are reared in large numbers in Lincoln fens, partly for the sake of their quills. Many other kinds of poultry are also common. England is generally well-wooded, & 62,620 acres of royal forest lands are enclosed for the growth of timber. The New Forest in Hampshire, the forests of Sherwood (Notts), Dean (Gloucestershire), are among the largest of the forest-tracts; but the oak, so valuable a material for the construction of the British navy, grows to the greatest perfection in the weald of Sussex, Surrey, & Kent, a tract comprising all the country between the N. & S. Downs, & many parts of which have remained densely wooded ever since the Roman period. The fisheries, though they have never been chief sources of national wealth, are highly important in some localities. In the N. Sea the herring fishery is that principally pursued, & about 100 smacks, of from 40 to 50 tons burden, are annually employed from Yarmouth, which has an extensive trade in herrings. The towns of Sunderland, Whitby, Scarboro', & Harwich, are also a good deal interested in the same trade. On the coasts of Devon & Cornwall, a large proportion of the population are employed in the pilchard fisheries, which fish visit those shores in vast shoals during the summer. Cod, mackerel, soles, flounders, salmon, in some of the N. estuaries, and oysters, are the other fish of most importance taken in the British seas. At many of the ports, ships are fitted out for whale fisheries in the N. & S. oceans, & these employ many thousands of seafaring people. England is indebted for the high rank she holds, in a great degree, to her extraordinary mineral wealth.

The abundant supply of coals obtained in Lancashire, W. Yorkshire, Northumberland, Durham, Staffordshire & Warwickshire, have rendered those counties the seats of the largest & most flourishing manufactures in the world, & it is supposed that from 210,000 to 250,000 of the pop. are directly dependent for subsistence on the iron trade. Tin is produced only in Cornwall & Devon, & copper is almost confined to that region; the annual produce of the former is estimated at 4,500 tons; & that of the latter at 13,000 tons. Lead is raised in Somerset, Derbyshire, & Cumberland, the mines being supposed to employ 1,100 men. The total quantity obtained annually in England & Wales, is estimated at 50,000 tons, from which silver to the value of about 30,000*l.* is usually extracted. Plumbago is found in the greatest purity at Borrowdale in Cumberland, & some of inferior quality in Devonshire, where also manganese is raised. Zinc, nickel, arsenic, alum, salt from beds & springs in Cheshire & Worcestershire, potters' clay in Staffordshire & Cornwall, lime, freestone & granite, are among the most valuable minerals. [For stat. of coal & iron see BRITAIN.] Manufactures are in the greatest variety. By far the most important are those of cotton goods, the great seat of which is S. Lancashire, & it is estimated that cotton fabrics & yarn to the value of 35,000,000*l.* are annually produced in England, by the manufacture of which about 1,200,000 individuals derive their support. The woollen manufactures are chiefly seated in W. Yorkshire, especially at & around Leeds, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, & Dewsbury; also in the counties Lancaster, Cumberland, Gloucester, Wilts, Devon, & Somerset. In Leicestershire 12,000 stocking frames are supposed to be at work; & Norwich has still some trade in worsteds. The manufacture of linens is pursued principally in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, & Dorset; & that of silks in the metropolis (Spitalfields), & at Manchester, Macclesfield & Coventry, in which last town ribbons are chiefly woven. Norwich is the principal seat of the crape manufacture. The foregoing manufactures are mostly wrought with the aid of steam, & there were in 1847, 3,475 mills, viz., 1,589 cotton, 1,029 woollen, 416 worsted, 178 flax, 263 silk, with an aggregate power of 77,921 horses, and employing 453,182 persons.

Next in importance to the manuf. of woven fabrics is that of hardwares. The more ponderous iron machinery is wrought in Shropshire, Staffordshire, in the vicinity of Birmingham, & in the great naval dockyards. Sheffield, London & Birmingham, are the principal seats of the manufacture of cutlery. Watch & clock works are made especially in Lancashire; & the total annual value of the hardwares produced, is estimated at 17,000,000*l.* Leather gloves are made at Worcester, Yeovil, & Woodstock; boots & shoes in large quantities in the cos. Northampton & Stafford; & the leather manufacture is estimated to employ in all nearly 234,000 hands, and to produce goods to the value of 13,000,000*l.* a year. Earthenwares manufactured in the potteries of N.W. Staffordshire, & china wares in Derbyshire & Worcestershire, are supposed to amount to 2,300,000*l.* annually; & glass wares chiefly made in the N. cos. to 2,000,000*l.* a year, their manufacture employing 50,000 hands. Paper to about 1,500,000*l.*; hats to double that amount; bricks & tiles, soap, gunpowder, chemical wares, straw-plait, & all goods required for ordinary use, are produced in England. Extensive sugar refineries, distilleries, & breweries, are established in all the larger commercial towns; & the London breweries are estimated to supply annually 2,000,000 barrels of porter. Ship-building is a most extensive & important branch of industry: the largest ships of the line are built at the great dock-yards of Portmouth, Plymouth, & Chatham; & others at the yards of Sheerness and Deptford. Mercantile vessels of large burden are chiefly built in or near London, Liverpool, Sunderland, Newcastle, Hull, Yarmouth, Bristol, Southampton, and Cowes. Internal communication is effected by numerous navigable canals, & in every direction by the best turnpike roads in any country in the world; but both these means of traffic have been in a great part superseded by a most extensive series of railroads, which already extend like a net work over the greater part of England. London, though placed near one extremity of the island, is the great centre of the principal railroads; from it branch out the Great Western to Bristol, with a prolongation to Exeter & Plymouth; the S. Western to Southampton & Gosport; the S. coast r. r. to Brighton & Portsmouth; the S.E. to Dover; the North Kent, the E. Counties to Norwich & Yarmouth, the Great Northern to York, & the N.W. to Birmingham. Manchester, Derby, Leeds, York, & Stockton, are centres of numerous railroads.

England, in the early middle ages, composed a heptarchy of 7 kingdoms—viz. Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumbria, E. Anglia, including the S.E. cos., & Mercia including the Midland cos. These provinces, under the Saxon monarchy, have, with a few exceptions, long been obsolete; but ecclesiastically, the country is divided into the two provs. or archbishoprics of Canterbury & York. The former of these, comprising all the country S. of the Dee & Humber, is sub-divided into the sees of Canterbury, London, Winchester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Ely, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath & Wells, Chichester, Norwich, Worcester, Hereford, Rochester, Oxford, Peterboro', & Gloucester, together with the 4 Welsh bishoprics; & the prov. of York comprises the see of that city, with those of Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Ripon, & the Isle of Man. There are 10,718 parishes or parochial benefices, the incumbents of which enjoy an aggregate revenue of about 3,250,000*l.* annually. The cos. are territorial divisions, some of which were established during the heptarchy. In each are a lord lieutenant & one or more sheriffs appointed by the Crown, a variable number of magistrates commissioned by royal authority to act as justices of the peace, & one or more coroners, elected by the commonalty. Besides parishes, the cos. are generally sub-divided into hundreds & tythings, & pa. unions; in addition, Sussex is divided into rapes, Kent into lathes, Lincoln into parts, the extreme N. cos. into wards, & Yorkshire into wapentakes & ridings, all which are more extensive divisions than those previously named. Cities & boroughs are governed by their own corporations, which, since the Municipal Reform Act, have consisted of a mayor & a variable number of aldermen, & three times their number of councillors or burgesses, elected by the different bor. wards. The cities of London, Bristol, Canterbury, Coventry, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, & York, & the towns, Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Poole, & Southampton, are cos. of themselves, & participate in the regulations applying to cos. in the election of representatives to Parliament. EUPHRASIA, t., Gray co., Can. W. Pop. 603.

EUPHRATES (native Phraut, or Frat), a famous r. of Asiatic Turkey, the E.most part of which it drains; rises by two heads in the table land of Armenia, the source of the principal, the Morad, being between Lake Van & Mount Ararat & that of the Frat, about 20 m. N.E. Erzeroum. Both branches have a W. course, and they unite in lat. 39° N., lon. 39° E., whence the Euphrates has successively a S. & S.E. course, encompassing on three sides the whole basin of its chief tributary the Tigris, and separating Turkish Armenia and Mesopotamia from Syria & the Arabian Desert. In lat. 31° N., lon. 47° E., the Tigris unites with it to form the Shat-ul-Arab, which about 130 miles below enters the head of the Persian Gulf, and including which, the total length of the Euphrates to the source of the Morad may be estimated at 1,800 m. In its upper third, it traverses a mountainous country, & near Someisat breaks through the Taurus chain, forming a double cataract; but from this point it is navigable to the sea, & in its lower part flows through a rich & flat region, where it varies from 200 to 800 yards in width, having as high as Hillah a depth of 18 feet, & navigable for steamers drawing 4 feet water, from the sea to Bir, 100

m. E. the Gulf of Scanderoon, & the nearest point of its approach to the Mediterranean. Besides the Tigris, it receives the Kara-su of Kaisariyeh, Khabur, & Kerah rivers; & on its banks are the Bassorah (on the Shat-ul-Arab), & the towns Arja, Semava, Lemlum, Hillah (the modern representative of Babylon), Anbar, Hit, Heeth, Kaskisia, Rakha, &c.; & in Armenia, Melagherd, & Erzeroum.

EURE, Eura, a river of France, rises in dep. Orne, flows N.E. through the deps. Eure-et-Loire & Eure, past Chartres, Nogent-le Roi, Ivry, Louviers, & joins the Seine on left, near Point-de-l'Ardeche. Chief affl. the Iton on left. Length 112 m., for 50 of which it is navigable.

EURE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Evreux, forms part of the old prov. of Normandy, situated on the estuary of the Seine, between lat. 48° 37′ & 49° 28′ N. Area, 2,414 sq. ms. Pop. 1851, 415,777. Climate mild and humid; surface generally flat. Chief rivers, the Seine & its affluents, the Eure, Rille, Andelle, and the Iton, affluent of the Eure. Minerals comprise iron, building & mill stones; corn is raised for exportation; apples and pears are important crops; pasture is extensive, and forests cover one-fifth part of the dep.; excellent horses, cattle, & sheep are reared. Mining and manufacture industry very active. Manufactures include woollens, cotton, paper, glass, iron, copper, and zinc wares. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Les Andelys, Bernay, Evereux, Louviers, and Pont-Audemer.

EURE-ET-LOIR, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Chartres, forms part of the old provs. Orleannais & Ile-de-France, between lat. 47° 57′ & 48° 55′ N. Area, 2,361 sq. ms. Pop. 1851, 294,892. Chief rivers, the Eure & Loire; there are many marshes in the W. Climate mild & temperate. Soil extremely fertile; a great amount of corn is raised, & it is considered the granary of Paris. Excellent cavalry horses are reared, & numerous cattle, sheep, & poultry. The dep. is poor in minerals, but has several iron works, & manufs. of coarse cloths, cottons, & paper. It is divided into the arronds. Chartres, Châteaudun, Dreux, & Nogent-le-Rotrou.

EURIPOS CHANNEL, Greece. [EUBŒA.]

EUROPE, Europa, the smallest, but most civilized, & in proportion to its extent, the best peopled of the five great divisions of the globe; forms a peninsular prolongation of Asia, from which it is separated on the E. by the river Kara, the Ural mountains & river, and the Caspian Sea; & on the S. by the mountain chain of Caucasus. On all other sides it is bounded by seas, bays, gulfs, & straits; these are, on the N. the Arctic Ocean, W. the Atlantic, & S. the Strait of Gibraltar, the Mediterranean, the Sea of Marmora, & the Black Sea. The continental portion of Europe is comprised between lat. 36° & 71° 12′ N., & lon. 9° 30′ W. & 60° 50′ E. Its greatest length from Astrakhan to Brest is 2,450 m., & its extreme breadth from Cape Nord-Kyn to Cape Matapan 2,360 m. Area estimated at 3,635,411 sq. ms., 3-4ths of which is occupied by plains, & 1-4th by mountains & high lands. The peninsulas comprise 1-4th, & the islands 1-21st of the whole extent. Pop. 258,074,841.

One of the great characteristics of this quarter of the globe, is the vast number of inland seas & estuaries by which it is intersected, & the immense extent of coast line (17,960 m.) which in consequence it enjoys. The principal peninsulas thus formed are in the N.: Scandinavia, between the Baltic Sea & the Atlantic Ocean; Jutland, between the Baltic & the German Ocean; the peninsula of Brittany, between the English Channel & the Bay of Biscay. In the S., the Iberian peninsula (Spain & Portugal), between the Mediterranean & the Atlantic Ocean; the Italian peninsula, between the Adriatic & the Tyrrhenian Sea; the Hellenic peninsula (Greece & Turkey), E. of Italy; & the Crimea in the N. of the Black Sea. The principal islands are in the German Ocean, the British Isles, the largest in Europe. In the Arctic Ocean, Iceland & Nova Zembla. In the Mediterranean & its branches, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Malta, Elba, & the Balearic islands. The isls. of Greece, Crete or Candia, the Ionian isls., & the isls. of Dalmatia. The Baltic includes numerous islands, the chief of which are Seeland, Fulmen, & Laaland, Rugen, Bornholm, Oeland, Gothland, & the archipelago of Stockholm. Most of the rivers of Europe belong to two great basins, that of the Atlantic & its branches on the W., & the Mediterranean on the S.; the line of separation which follows the direction S.W. to N.E., is elevated on the W., where it is formed by the Sierra Nevada, part of the Pyrenees, the Cevennes & the Vosges mountains; it meets the Alps near the sources of the Rhine & Rhone. After cutting the Carpathians on the N. of Hungary, the watershed traverses Russia, where its elevation is very inconsiderable. On the E. & S.E., the Volga & its affluents contribute their waters to the Caspian Sea, & on the N.E. the Dwina flows to the Arctic Ocean. The mean height of Europe is 686 feet. A great part of N. Germany, Denmark, Holland, & part of Belgium are plains, little elevated above the level of the sea; the great plains of Russia & Poland have a mean height of 360 feet; the other countries of Europe are traversed by chains of mountains, the chief of which are the Scandinavian Alps in Sweden & Norway, the Carpathians & their contreforts, the Sudetic mntns. in Germany; the Balkan mountains, the Dinaric Alps, & the chain of Pindus in Turkey; the Alps between Italy, France, Switzerland, and Germany; the Apennines in Italy, the Jura between France & Switzerland, the Cevennes & the mountains of Auvergne in France, the Pyrenees between France & Spain, the Iberian & the Cantabrian mountains, the Sierra Estrella, the mountains of Toledo, the Sierra Morena, & the Sierra Nevada in Spain. The principal summits of the different chains are, in the Alps, Mont Blanc, the culminating point of Europe, 15,810 feet, Monte Rosa 15,208 feet. In the Pyrenees, Pic Nethou or Maladetta 11,168 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, the peak of Mulhaçen 11,660 feet. The mountains of Great Britain cover the N. & W. parts of the island; their general direction corresponds with that of the Scandinavian mountains, & like them also the W. sides are abrupt, and broken up by numerous gulfs, while they slope gradually to the E. shores. The principal chains are the Grampians & the Cheviots, & the culminating point is Ben Nevis 4,368 feet. Iceland is covered with mountains, the highest of which is the Oräfäjokel, 6,405 feet in elev. The isls. of Sardinia & Corsica are traversed by a small chain of mountains, interrupted by the Strait of Bonafacio, culminating point Monto Rotondo in Corsica 8,760 feet. Sicily is traversed by a chain of mountains, separated from the Apennines by the Strait of Messina, culminating point Mount Etna 10,874 feet. Some of these mountain chains contain numerous extinct volcanoes, & the volcanoes of Etna, Vesuvius, Heckla, & Stromboli are still in a state of activity.

Europe is every where well-watered; it has no deserts like those in Asia & Africa. The most important rivers are the Volga, Don, Dnieper, Danube, Po, Rhone, Ebro, Tagus, Garonne, Loire, Seine, Meuse, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Vistula, Dwina. Lakes abound in Sweden, the N.W. of Russia, Switzerland, Hungary, & Italy. The most remarkable are Wener, Wetter, Mælar in Sweden; Ladoga & Onega in Russia; Leman, Lucerne, & Zurich in Switzerland; Constance between Switzerland & Germany; Neusiedl & Balaton in Hungary; Maggiore, Como, & Garda in N. Ital.

The climate of continental Europe presents the most striking contrasts, but it is in general temperate, & exempt from the extremes of heat & cold to which the other great divisions of the globe are exposed. This is partly owing to the seas by which it is surrounded, & partly to the gulf stream, the heated atmosphere from which, is carried by the prevailing S.W. winds to the W. shores of Europe. The numerous inland seas, lakes, & rivers which intersect it, soften the atmosphere, & induce a humidity favorable to vegetation. South of the parallel of lat. 45° N.; extreme cold is rare, & of short duration, while the heat is tempered by the mountains which cover this portion of Europe; but the southern coasts frequently suffer from the hot wind of Africa, the Sirocco, which is occasionally arrested only at the foot of the Alps. The great plain of the N.E. being exposed to N. winds from the Arctic Ocean, has a much more severe climate than the other countries of Europe. The lower limit of perpetual snow in Europe, has, in the Alps & Pyrenees, an elevation of 8,000 feet; &, in the interior of Norway, 4,000 feet. The soil of the different countries of Europe, is, on the whole, fertile, & produces all the vegetable substances of temperate climates. In the peninsulas of the S., where the vegetation resembles that of the tropics, the sugar cane, the cotton plant, the orange, citron, fig, pomegranate, vine, rice, & tobacco are cultivated, & the trees comprise the chesnut, oak, & pine. In the central regions, comprising France, Switzerland, & the valleys of the Rhine, Elbe, Danube, & Theiss, & on the shores of the Black & Caspian Seas, the vine is cultivated with success; the orchards supply the walnut, peach, apricot, apple, & pear; wheat, rye, & in some places tobacco & maize are cultivated; the poplar is common, the chesnut is rare, & the forests comprise the oak, beech & fir. In the British islands, & the greater part of lower Europe, valuable grain is cultivated, & the forests produce the oak, beech, birch & pine. In the N. part of Europe, barley & oats are cultivated as far as lat. 60° N. in Lapland, & the forests produce the pine & the birch; the N. of Russia is incapable of producing any kind of grain.

The zoology of Europe is less remarkable than that of the other divisions of the globe. Confining attention to the land mammalia, & omitting all notice of the domesticated races, the following exhibits the gross number exclusively European: 1 Quadrumana, 27 Cheiroptera, 50 Carnivora, 35 Rodentia, 1 Pachydermata, and 9 Ruminantia. Thus no animal occurs belonging to the Edentata (toothless animals,) and Marsupialia (pouched animals). There is one species of Quadrumana (four handed), the Barbary ape, naturalized on the rock of Gibraltar, and one species of Pachydermata (thick skinned), the wild boar, still common in the forests. The Cheiroptera (hand winged), comprehends various races of bats generally diffused. The most interesting of the Rodentia, (gnawers), is the beaver, still lingering on the banks of the Rhone, Rhine, Danube, and other rivers. The carnivorous animals are mostly insignificant, excepting the bear, wolf, & lynx. The ruminants comprise the reindeer, generally domesticated, but wild in the extreme north, the elk, fallow deer, red deer or stag, roebuck, chamois, ibex, mouffion or musmon, & auroch. The two last are peculiar to Europe, & very confined in their range, the moufflon inhabiting the rocky heights of Sardinia and Corsica, and the auroch roaming in a few Russian forests.

The fauna of Europe is less varied than that of the other continents of the old world, but is rich in useful animals, & exempt from the noxious species common to Asia & Africa. The horse, cow, ass, sheep, goat, pig, & dog are distributed nearly all over the continent the buffalo inhabits the marshy plains of Italy, Wallachia, & Hungary; & the camel is found near the Black Sea. In the N. of Europe, the rein-deer renders valuable service to man; many quadrupeds yield furs, and the eider duck furnishes the down so valuable in commerce. The forests are peopled with hares, foxes, deer, & wild boars; the wolf & the bear are common in Scandinavia. In the higher Alps & the Pyrenees are found the chamois, the wild goat, the bear, & the eagle. The birds of prey comprise the vulture, kite, eagle, & falcon.

The mineral riches of Europe are highly important, less on account of the precious metals, than the abundance of the most useful minerals, to which it greatly owes the development of its industry, & the superiority it has acquired over the other regions of the globe. The most productive gold mines in Europe are those of the Carpathians in the N. of Hungary, Transylvania & Russia. The richest silver mines are those of the Erzgebirge, the Carpathians, & the Harz in Germany, and the Alps in Scandinavia. Iron is very widely distributed, it is most abundant in Britain, & general in the Cevennes, the Vosges, the Jura, the E. Alps, the Riesengebirge, & other mountains in Germany, & in the Scandinavian Alps. Lead is abundant in the E. part of the Sierra Nevada, in Cornwall, & in the E. Alps. Copper in Cornwall, the E. Alps, & the Alps of Scandinavia. Tin is nowhere plenty except in Cornwall, & zinc is mostly found in the Riesengebirge. The principal mines of mercury are those of Almaden in the Sierra Morena, & of Idria in the E. Alps. Salt mines occur principally in the Carpathians & in the E. Alps, but sea salt is obtained abundantly on the greater part of the coasts—especially on those of the Black Sea. Coal is most abundant in Great Britain, but rich mines exist also in Belgium, in the Cevennes, & in the mountains between the Rhine & the Weser. The greatest amount of turf is obtained in the low plains of N. Holland, & at the mouths of the Meuse & Rhine in S. Holland. Europe, now the most powerful division of the world, was to a great extent plunged in barbarism, at a time when Asia & Africa had powerful nations, & rich & populous cities. The navigators of Phœnicia, Greece, & Tuscany diffused civilization and the arts through the countries of the S., while those of the middle & N. of Europe, separated by impenetrable forests & vast marshes, were inhabited by nomade races, unacquainted with agriculture & commerce. Among these, however, the Celts, Germans, & Sarmatians formed powerful nations, who held disputed sway, till the Romans subdued all the countries of the S. & W., & during five centuries gave them their language, their arts, & their laws. In the 5th century the Roman Empire was dismembered by irruptions of barbarians, & Europe again partially reverted to a state of barbarism. Modern civilization dawned amidst the struggles consequent on the founding of the empire of Charlemagne, at the end of the 8th century. It was much facilitated by the crusades in the 12th century, & far more by the invention of printing in the 15th century. The marit. discoveries of the 15th century, distributed over the globe the commerce & the colonies of Europeans, who now people the greater part of America, & have settled in Africa & the islands of the Indian & the Pacific Oceans.

The pop. belong entirely to the Indo-Europ. family of the Caucasian race (except a few Mongolian tribes in the N. & E. of the continent). The varieties of this family consist of the Teutonic or German, distributed over the N. & W. of Europe; the Slavonian in the centre & E.; the Hellenic & Pelasgian in the S.; the Celtic in the W., &c. Christianity in its different forms, is professed by a great majority of the inhabitants. The Greek church prevails in Russia, Greece, the Ionian islands, Servia, Moldavia, & Wallachia, parts of Turkey, Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, Slavonia, & Dalmatia. The Roman Catholic church is dominant in the S. & W. of Europe, in Italy, Spain & Portugal, France, Belgium, a great part of Austria, & some of the smaller German states, Switzerland, & Ireland. The Protestant church prevails in Prussia, Saxony, Wurtemberg, Hanover, & several of the smaller German states, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, & England, as well as in parts of France & Austria, & in the Baltic provs. of Russia. Mohammedanism is confined to the inhabitants of Turkey.

Its massive Norman towers over each transept, richly carved W. front, painted windows, colossal organ & bell, episcopal throne, chapter-ho., library, and numerous chapels, with the monuments of its bishops, & of the Bohurst Courtenays, deserve special mention. There are 38 churches,—3 Baptist, 1 Bible Christian, 1 Brethren, 25 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 2 Independent, 1 Jews' synagogue, 2 Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic & 1 Unitarian. The bishop's palace was built in the reign of Edward IV.; the grammar school, founded in 1633, has an annual rev. exceeding 800*l*., and about 15 exhibitions to the universities; there are numerous other well-endowed schools & anc. hospitals; a modern co. hospital, lunatic, blind, & deaf & dumb asylums, female penitentiary, infirmary, & work-ho.; a co. sessions-ho. within the yard of the ancient castle of Rougemont, of which vestiges remain; a co. & city jail & bridewell, large cavalry & artillery barracks, an ancient guildhall containing some interesting portraits, a theatre, circus, baths, fine ball-room, beautiful park promenade, sevl. fountains, a public library, museum, athenæum, mechanics' institution, scientific & literary institution, about 6 banks, 5 weekly newspapers, a custom-house, bonding-warehouse, & cloth-halls. Exeter is a great thoroughfare; excellent markets, and a beautiful vicinity induce many to reside here. It has still some manufs. of serges, paper, &c., with large breweries and iron foundries; but its once immense trade has greatly declined, notwithstanding the recent improvements of the port, the forming of a large floating basin, & the deepening of the anc. ship canal to Topsham, by which vessels of 300 tons now approach the city. The heavy port dues, consequent upon these improvements, are said to check commerce. Markets, Wednesday, Friday, & Saturday; that on Friday being the largest for corn and wool in the W. of England. Races in Aug. Corp. debt, more than 2-3ds of which has been incurred by the ship canal, about 150,000*l*. Exeter has sent 2 mems. to H. of C. since 1286. It is also the place of election for the S. division of the co. Its bishopric, fixed here in 1050 by Edward the Confessor, comprises 4 archdeaneries & about 640 benefices, occupying nearly the whole of Cornwall & Devon. Average rev. of dean & chapter (including 24 prebendaries), about 10,000*l*. Exeter gives title of Marquis to the Cecils. During the middle ages it sustained several sieges, & was noted for the number of its religious houses.

FALKLAND ISLANDS (French Malouines, Span. Malvinas), a group in the S. Atlantic, belonging to Gt. Britain, & consisting of 2 large & 200 small islands, between lat. 51° & 52° 30′ S., & lon. 57° 40′ & 61° 20′ W., about 310 m. E. the Strait of Magellan, Patagonia. Estimated area, 13,000 sq. m. Pop. 6,000. The E. Falkland isl. is nearly 100 m. in length, N.E. to S.W., by 60 m. in greatest breadth, and the W. Falkland measures about 90 by 50 m.; they are separated by Falkland Sound, from 9 to 12 m. in breadth. Others of the group are named the Great Swan, Saunders, Keppel, Pebble, Eagle, & Jason isls. Shores greatly indented, and mostly low, afford many good harbors. Surface more lofty in the W. than in the E. portion of the group, but in the latter are some hills 1,700 feet above the sea. Clay slates of the silurian system constitute the greater part of the level country, & quartz rock the mountain summits. Climate temperate and healthy, but moist westerly winds, often very violent, prevail. Mean temperature of year, 47°.2; summer, 53°.3; winter, 39°.9, Fahr. Grass lands are extremely luxuriant, & these isls. are well adapted for rearing live stock, already very numerous in a wild state. The tussac grass grows to the height of 6 feet. Shrub trees are the only timber. Peat is abundant to the depth of 10 feet. Some vegetables are raised in the settled parts, but little or no corn. The only indigenous quadruped is a large fox; sea fowl are in considerable numbers; snipe, quails, hawks, &c., and a species of vulture, are found in the islands. Copper and iron ores have been discovered; and seals and whales are plentiful around the coasts, and fish, especially cod, are abundant in the bays. These islands form a convenient station for ships to procure provisions & fresh water, but are at present of little further value. An English garrison, formerly stationed at Port Louis, Berkley Sound, E. Falkland, is now removed to Stanly harbor, Port William. The remaining inhabs. are mostly Buenos-Ayrean colonists, with some Indians, Europeans, & occasionally the crews of whaling vessels. The Falkland Islands were discovered by Davis, in 1592, colonized by the French in 1763, taken by the Spaniards in 1767, & ceded in 1771 to the English, who have held uninterrupted possession of them only since 1833.

steep & rugged, interior mountainous, highest peaks, in Osteroe, 2,864, & in Stromoe, 2,430 feet. The channels which separate the islands afford several good bays. The islands enjoy all the advantages of an insular climate, & derive great benefit from the N. branch of the gulf stream, which, besides raising the temperature, carries to their shores considerable quantities of drift wood. The winters are extremely mild, so much so, that sheep & cattle require no housing. Summer moist & foggy. The longest day in summer is 20, and the shortest in winter 4 hours; but the length of the day is greatly extended by the morning and evening twilight, & by the aurora borealis. There is no timber on the islands, but turf is abundant. Barley is cultivated, but does not always ripen. Turnips & potatoes yield good crops. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the fisheries, of which that of a species of small whale is the most important; & in the preparation of wool. Sheep, of which there are 80,000, form the chief riches of the islanders. The horses are small but powerful; wagons are not employed. Sea-fowl are numerous; & feathers form a considerable article of commerce. Among minerals, the chief are fine opals and coal, the last especially in Suderoe. The people, of Norwegian descent, are robust and healthy; their spoken language is a dialect of the N. German, but their written language is Danish. The islands are governed by an amtmann, who is also military commandant, a judge, & a provost. The trade is a royal monopoly; & half of the soil belongs to the king. The islands are divided into 7 parishes under 1 bishop. Thorshavn, on the S. coast of Stromoe (pop. 720), is the cap. & the only town. The chief islands are Stromoe, the central & largest of the group. Area, 146 sq. m. FEEJEE, Fidjii, or Viti, an island group, S. Pacific Ocean, between lat. 15° 30′ & 19° 30′ S., & lon. 177° E. & 178° W. Pop. 133,500. The entire group which comprises altogether 154 islands, 65 of which are inhabited, is subdivided into two minor groups, the Eastern & Asaua groups, the latter forming the W. side of the Archipelago. There are numerous spacious outlets or passages to & from the central space, enclosed by the group known as the Gore sea. Two of the islands only are of large size, namely, Viti Levu, & Paou or Sandalwood islands. The other principal islands are Vuna, Kantaon, Ovolau, Bau, or Ambow, Muthuatu, & Goro; some of the others, though smaller, are populous. They each contain from 5,000 to 13,000 inhabitants. Most of the remainder are mere islets. They are of volcanic origin, but no signs of volcanic heat have been met with, excepting at Savu-Savu on the S. shore of the large isl. of Paou. Appearances of craters, however, are frequent. The peaks are usually basaltic cones, some of which rise to the height of sev. thousand ft. They are covered by a luxuriant foliage to their summits, giving them a singularly pleasing & picturesque aspect. Some beautiful & fruitful valleys occur. That of Voona, in the island of Ovolau is strikingly characteristic of this description of Feejee scenery. One of those almost inaccessible peaks, on which the natives locate their towns for safety, is also conspicuous. The soil of these islands consists of a deep loam of a yellowish color, with a large proportion of decayed vegetable matter, which, aided by a fine climate, and abundance of water, is extremely productive. Fruits of various kinds abound, including the bread fruit, of which there are nine different sorts, the banana, cocoa, shaddocks, papaw apple, Tahiti chesnut, and a number of other fruits. Pumpkins, cucumbers, cape gooseberry, guava, pine apples, water melons, & large red capsicums, also abound. But the chief food of the inhabitants is the yam, of which there are five or six varieties, sugar cane, turmeric, & tobacco are also cultivated by the natives. Sandalwood, for which these islands were formerly noted, has wholly disappeared. Vegetation is exceedingly rapid, turnips, radish, and mustard seed, after being sown 24 hours, the cotyledon leaves were above the surface. Melons, cucumbers, & pumpkins spring up in three days, beans & peas make their appearance in four. In four weeks from the time of planting, radishes & lettuce were fit for use, and in five weeks marrowfat peas. The climate is agreeable & healthful. The mean temperature at Ovolau, one of the most beautiful islands of the group, during the six weeks that the observatory of the U. S. Exploring Expedition was established there, was 77° 81′. The barometer stood at 30.126 in. The lowest temperature was 62°, the highest 96°. The winds from April to November, prevail from the E.N.E. to S.E., at times blowing a fresh trade wind. From November to April N. winds are often experienced, & in the months of February & March heavy gales are frequent, and generally last two or three days. The coasts abound with fish, including several of peculiar species; crabs are also numerous.

The natives are a barbarous & savage race, extremely covetous, & addicted to lying. They are generally above the middle height, complexion very dark, faces long, with a large mouth, good & well-set teeth, and a well formed nose, eyes black & penetrating. Human sacrifices were formerly frequent amongst them, & cannibalism common. The Feejeans, however, excel their neighbors in the useful arts, such as building large canoes, & the manufacture of native cloth & pottery, & they are polite in their communications with those they respect. They are ruled by chiefs, to whom great deference is paid, & who in turn appear to acknowledge the supremacy of the chief of Ambow, who has recently assumed the title of Tui Viti, King of the Feejees. The missionaries have made great progress in the windward group. The frames of Feejean houses are constructed of the bread fruit-tree, & are filled in with reeds, & the roof is covered with a thatch of the wild sugar-cane. They are usually oblong in shape, & from 20 to 25 ft. in length. But the most remarkable structure is the mbure or spirit house. It is built on a raised & walled mound, & is of uncouth proportions, being nearly twice as high as it is broad at its base, and has a singular sharp-peaked roof. In these structures certain deities are worshipped by priests called Ambati. Of such structures, each town has at least one, & often several. The towns are usually fortified with strong palisades, & have but two entrances, in which are gates, the passage being so narrow as to admit of only one person at a time.

Federal representative population, 71,677.

Physical features, &c.—The face of the country is uneven, but nowhere elevated over 300 feet above the sea. The whole extent of the coast is indented with bays & lagoons. A large portion of the country is covered with pine forests, the trees of which standing at a considerable distance from each other, without brush or underwood, afford an opportunity for the grass & flowers to spread with luxuriance over the surface of the earth during the whole year. The borders of the streams are usually skirted by hammocks of hard timber entangled with grape & other vines. A large portion of Florida consists of what are usually denominated "pine barrens," & much of it is sterile, though there are extensive tracts of table land, hammock, & swamp of the richest soil & well adapted to the cultivation of sugar, rice, cotton, Indian corn, tobacco, & fruits. A considerable portion of the pine land is equally rich, & even the barrens afford extensive ranges of growing land usually intersected with streams of pure water. Many parts of the state abound in yellow pine and live oak timber. The sea coast is generally healthy, and in parts remarkably so, & the interior is equally healthy unless it be in the neighborhood of extensive marshes. The peninsula, which is the southern portion of the state, presents a singular alternation of savannahs, hammocks, & lagoons, called collectively the Everglades, which extend into the heart of the country for 200 miles north of Cape Sable. They are drained on the north by the St. John river, & on the west by Macaco or Charlotte river.

There were in this state in 1850, 349,049 acres of land improved, & 1,246,240 unimproved in farms. Cash value of farms $6,323,109, & the value of implements and machinery $658,795. Live stock, &c.—Horses, 10,848; asses & mules, 5,092; Milch cows, 72,876; working oxen, 5,794; other cattle, 182,415; sheep, 23,511; swine, 209,453;—value of live stock, $2,880,058; of slaughtered animals, $514,685.

Agricultural products, &c.—Wheat, 1,027 bushels; rye, 1,152; Indian corn, 1,996,809; oats, 66,586; buck wheat, 55; pease and beans, 135,359; potatoes, 7,828; sweet potatoes, 757,226; rice, 1,075,090 pounds. Value of products of the orchard, $1,280; produce of market gardens, $8,721. Pounds of butter made, 371,498; of cheese, 18,015; sugar, hhds., 2,750; molasses, 352,893 gallons; bees wax & honey, 18,971 pounds; wool, pounds produced, 23,247; cotton, 45,121; flax, 50; silk cocoons, 6; hops, 14 pounds; tobacco, 998,614; hay, tons of, 2,510; & were made 10 gallons of wine. Value of home made manufactures, $75,582.

Rivers, Bays, &c.—There are many bays on the western side of the peninsula, some of which form good harbors. They are Perdido, Pensacola, Choctawhatchee, St. Andrew, St. Joseph, Apalachicola, Appalachee, Tampa, Carlos, & Gallivains. On the east coast of the peninsula the inlets afford harbors for coasting vessels. The St. John is the principal river on the eastern coast. It often spreads from three to five miles in width, & at other places it is not more than one fourth of a mile wide. It is exceedingly winding, & flows through a beautiful & healthy country. St. Mary river rises in Okefinoke Swamp, Georgia, & enters the Atlantic between Cumberland & Amelia Islands. Of the rivers which enter the Gulf of Mexico, the Apalachicola is the principal. It is formed by the junction of Chattahoochee & Flint rivers, about 100 miles from the Gulf of Mexico. The Chattahoochee branch of this river is navigable for steamboats 280 miles to Columbus, Georgia. The other principal rivers are Escambia, Suwanee, Withlacoochee, Oscilla, Ockloekony, and Choctawhatchee. Perdido river forms the western boundary between Florida & Alabama. It is navigable about seven miles above the bay, is a fine mill stream, & its banks are covered with superior yellow pine timber. There are in this state several streams of limpid water which sink into the earth & disappear, & several which rise suddenly from the earth, one in particular (the Wakulla) is navigable from its very source. The quantity of lumber shipped from the St. John river annually is estimated at 50,000,000 feet. Total tonnage of the state in 1853 amounted to 12,124.25 tons.

The principal places in the state are Tallahassee the capital, Key West, St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Pensacola, & Apalachicola. On the 1st of Jan. 1854, there were 21 miles of railroad in operation.

Manufactures, &c.—There were in the state in 1850, 1 cotton factory with a capital of $30,000, employing 28 males & 67 females, producing 624,000 yds. of sheeting, &c., valued at $49,920, 8 flouring & grist m., 48 saw m., 4 tanneries; 10 printing offices, 1 semi-weekly, & 9 weekly newspapers published. Capital invested in manufactures, $547,140; value of manufactured articles, $668,435.

Education, Churches, &c.—The common school system is supported by the interest of the common school fund.

There were in 1850, 34 academies, 1,251 pupils; 69 sch., 1,878 scholars; & there were 7 libraries, with an aggregate number of 2,660 vols. There were 56 Baptist churches, 10 Episcopal, 1 Free, 87 Methodist, 16 Presbyterian, 5 Roman Catholic, & 2 other sects, the whole having 177 churches. Total value of church property, $165,400.

The White Sulphur Spring is 80 miles from Jacksonville, & 120 from Tallahassee. This spring, which is a great curiosity, rises in a basin 10 feet deep & 30 inches in diameter, discharges a great quantity of water, and after a course of 100 feet enters the Suwanee river. It is so strongly impregnated with sulphur, that its waters may be distinguished for a considerable distance from its entrance into the river. The waters have been found highly beneficial in cases of consumption, rheumatism, dyspepsia, liver complaints, &c. There are here a large hotel, several boarding houses, and a fine bathing house.

By the constitution of the state adopted in 1838, the governor is elected for four years, & is ineligible for the succeeding four years. In case of vacancy the president of the senate, or after him, the speaker of the house, acts as governor. The General Assembly is chosen on the first Monday of October, & meets on the first Monday in November of each year. Senators are chosen for two years, & representatives for one year. Judges of the Supreme Court & Circuit Courts are appointed by the General Assembly, at first for five years, & after that term, during good behavior. The right of suffrage belongs to every free white male aged 21 years or upwards, who has resided in the state for two years, and in the county for six months, & who shall be enrolled in the militia, or be by law exempted from serving therein. The state provides for a registration of qualified voters. No minister of the gospel, & no officer in a banking company, while he serves in the bank, nor for twelve months afterwards, can be eligible for governor, senator, or representative.

Florida was discovered in 1496 by Cabot, & visited & explored by Ponce de Leon in 1512 & in 1516. In 1539 Hernando de Soto arrived from Cuba with an armed force & explored a portion of the peninsula. San Augustine was settled in 1564, and Pensacola in 1596. Spain ceded it to Great Britain in 1763, but reconquered it in 1781, & it was confirmed to them in 1783. In 1819, Spain ceded it to the United States, & in the following year was erected into the Territory of Florida. From 1835 to 1842 the Seminole war prevailed, breaking up the settlements in the South, & most of the improvements were destroyed. At its close, the Indians were removed to the Western territory, beyond the Mississippi. In 1838 a constitution was adopted, preparatory to admission into the Union, which was finally consummated March 3d, 1845.

FLORIDA, cape, a promontory on the S.E. coast of Florida, situated on the S.W. end of an island called Key Biscayune. A light-house was erected here in 1825, to mark the entrance of Hawk's channel, in lat. 25° 39′ 54″ N., lon. 80° 5′ W. It shows a fixed light elevated 75 feet above the sea, & is visible for a distance of 13½ nautical miles.

FORMOSA (Chinese Tae-wan), an island off the S. E. coast of China, partly independent, & partly comprised in the prov. Fo-kien, between lat. 22° & 25° 30′ N., & lon. 121° E., about 90 m. from the Chinese coast, from which it is separated by the channel of Fo-kien, or Formosa. Estimated area 15,000 sq. ms. The Chinese pop. are estimated at 2,000,000; the number of native inhabitants is unknown. A volcanic mountain chain, with summits upwards of 12,000 feet in height, traverses the centre of the island from N. to S., separating the Chinese colonists of its W. half from the native Formosans on the E. side. On some parts of the coasts are bold headlands, but all the W. side is flat, & surrounded with quicksands & rocks. Surface of the Chinese portion well watered & generally fertile, producing great quantities of rice, sugar, camphor, and tobacco, with wheat, maize, millet, various fruits and spices, coffee, cotton, hemp, silk, fine timber, & bamboos. The Chinese colonists are of a very mixed description, Formosa having been a kind of "Botany Bay" to China; but among them there are many wealthy & active traders; & a very extensive commerce is carried on with Amoy, & other ports of the opposite coast, to which all the shipping employed in the trade belongs. Principal exports, the products already detailed, with salt & sulphur. Imports comprise tea, silks, woollens, & other manufactured goods. The native Formosans are a Malay race, little civilized, & living under petty chiefs. Formosa, with the Panghoo islands, forms a fu, or dep., under the prov. Fo-kien, subdivided into 5 hiens, or dists. Its cap., Tae-wan, is a Chinese city of the first class; & its schools are in pretty high repute in China. It was the last conquest of the present Tartar dynasty, & has been always rather insecurely held by the Chinese. In 1632 the Dutch became masters of it, but they were expelled by the famous pirate Coxinga, whose successors ruled here till 1684. It was on Formosa that the Nerbudda transport, & the brig Ann were wrecked in 1841; & nearly all their survivors ultimately put to death with great cruelty by the Chinese.

FORMOSA, the most N. of the Bissagos islands, off the W. coast of Africa. It is fertile & well wooded, but has no good water. * 1 Geographical square mile is equal to 5,486,962 hectares.

—III. the Cevennes in Languedoc, the highest points of which are Mezin 5,794 feet, and Lozere 4,884 feet.—IV. the mountains of Auvergne, a branch of the Cevennes: the highest points of which are Mont Dor 6,188 feet, Cantal 6,093 feet, and the Puy de Dome 4,806 feet.—V. the Jura between Franche Comte & Switzerland, in which the Reculet is 5,645 feet. The centre of France, comprising an 8th or 10th of its superficies, consists of plateaux from 1,200 to 1,900 feet in elevation, which are separated by narrow valleys. VI. the Vosges between Lorraine & Alsace, the summit of which is the Ballon d'Alsace 4,688 feet. The Vosges sends contreforts into Franche-Comté & Champagne, & are connected with the Cevennes by a chain of heights which separate the basin of the Rhone from those of the Seine & Loire, & in Burgundy are called the Côte d'Or.

The coasts of the English Channel are generally bordered by sandy downs; those of Brittany are covered with rocks. S. of the mouth of the Gironde, is a vast extent of country covered with marshy lakes (etangs) and shifting sands. France is drained by a great number of important rivers, the four principal of which are the Seine, which flows N.W. to the English Channel, the Loire and the Garonne, which flow generally W. to the Atlantic Ocean, and the Rhone, which flows S. into the Mediterranean. The other principal rivers are the Rhine, Moselle, Meuse, Sambre, Scheldt, & Lys, which contribute their waters to the basin of the North Sea, but have only a part of their course in France. The Somme, Orne, Yonne, Marne, Oise, Aisne, & Eure in the basin of the English Channel; the Blavet, Vilaine, Sèvre-Niortaise, Charente, Adour, Allier, Cher, Indre, Vienne, Creuse, Mayenne, Sarthe, Loire, Ariege, Tarn, Gers, Lot, Dordogne, and l'Isle in the basin of the Atlantic; the Aude, Herault, Ain, Saône, Doubs, Isere, and Durance in the basin of the Mediterranean. The different basins, and most of the principal rivers, are connected by canals. It is calculated that France has 133 navigable rivers, extending to 8,000 m. France has few lakes, but on its S.E. and S.W. coasts numerous marshes & lagoons, many of which communicate with the sea by narrow channels. The roads of France are divided into national, departmental, and communal roads; the first are paved and kept in excellent order, and the whole have been much improved within the last 20 years. A vast system of railroads has been projected, and mostly built, extending from Paris as a centre, to the extremities of the country in all directions.

France is comprised between the isotherm lines of 50° & 60° of Fahr.: its surface is little elevated, & its climate is in general temp., mild, & healthy. In the N., the winters are sometimes rigorous, & last more than half the year (mean temp. 50°. Fahr.); in the S., the summers are long & warm, the sky always serene, and the winters of short duration (mean temp. 60°. Fahr.); in the centre, the temperature is mild & more steady than in the N. & S. (mean temp. 58°. Fahr.); mean annual quantity of rain in S. 28., W. 24., N. 22., valley of Rhone 35, inches. Number of rainy days between lat. 48° & 46°, 134; in the lat. of Paris 165, on the coasts of the Mediterranean 66, & on the Atlantic 152; in the interior 147. Along the coasts of the Mediterranean the S. winds, heated by the burning desert of Africa, often spread desolation. The mistral, a glacial wind from the N.N.W., occasionally arrests vegetation by its furious blasts in the basin of the Rhone, while the E. wind from the snowy Alps is equally dreaded in the E. deps. The basin of the Garonne is visited by cold S. winds from the Bay of Biscay. The air is most moist, & rain most frequent, on the western coasts. The vegetables of France are abundant and most varied; they comprise wheat & other cereals, potatoes, truffles, beet-root, from which are produced annually, 45,484 tons of raw sugar: vines, which cover more than a 27th part of the superfices of the country, & furnish excellent wine, the most celebrated of which is that of Burgundy, Champagne, & Bordeaux; olive oil, the mulberry, lint, hemp, tobacco, hops, medicinal plants, & dye-woods. Among fruit trees, the apple, pear, cherry, walnut, chestnut, & almond abound. The orange, citron, olive, fig, pomegranate, & the pistachio are confined to the delicious regions of the S., along the shores of the Mediterranean. France furnishes excellent timber for ship-building & carpentry, & the cork-tree abounds in the S. The principal forests are those of Ardennes, Orleans, Fountainebleau, & Com-peigne; it is calculated that 1-8th of the superfices is covered with wood. Among wild animals are the bear, wolf, fox, wild cat, wild boar, stag, roe-buck, fallow deer, the chamois, hare, rabbit, & beaver. The most common domestic animals are the horse, mule, ass, ox, sheep, goats, pigs, & numerous fowls. Among birds, the most common are the eagle, falcon, buzzard, partridge, quail, & lark. Fish abound on the coasts, the most common are, in the Atlantic & English Channel, the herring, turbot, sole, whiting, pilchard; and salmon in the estuaries; lobsters, mussels, & rich banks of oysters are plenty on these coasts. The Mediterranean contains peculiar species of fish, as the tunny & anchovy. The honey bee is extensively reared; & silkworms form one of the principal sources of wealth; the kermes (Coccus Ilicis), which is found near the shores of the Mediterranean, furnishes a crimson dye. France possesses excellent building stones, & quarries of marble, alabaster, slate, & a few precious stones. The most important minerals are iron, which is found nearly over the whole country; copper, lead, silver, as well as antimony, sulphur, sulphate of iron, & mineral waters; the gold mines are insignificant. The coal & salt mines are of great value. There are 88 coal, anthracite, & lignite basins in France, the richest of which are the basin of the Loire & that of Valenciennes in the dep. Nord. In 1845 there were 443 coal mines worked & unworked, employing 30,778 miners, and producing 4,141,617 tons of mineral fuel. The salt marshes are a considerable source of wealth.

France is essentially an agricultural country. Since the commencement of the present century the cultivation of the soil has made remarkable progress, & in several deps. has been brought to great perfection. The progress of the industrial arts has been no less rapid during the same period: iron & coal mining has been annually on the increase; nearly 1,000 separate factories have been engaged in the fusion of metals, & the forging & manufacturing of iron & steel. The most important manufs. are those of arms, jewellery, watches, coach building, cabinet making, musical instruments, glass, crystal, pottery, chemical products, beet-root sugar, oil, soap, sugar, & salt refineries; dye-works, tanneries, paper-making, & printing; silks, cottons, woollen cloths, carpets, shawls, & lace. The value of machines exported in 1852, was valued at 5,855,946 francs; articles of millinery & dress making, 4,947,344 francs; wines, 2,426,974 hectolitres; cereals, 4,137,642 francs; salt, marine or saline, 1,088,929 metrical quintals; refined sugar, 160,058 met. quintals; woollen fabrics, 57,396 metrical quintals. The value of woollen cloth is estimated by M. Thiers at $71,000,000; & the manufacture of silk goods is the largest in the world. The products of manuf. industry, with those of the soil, form the objects of an immense internal commerce. External commerce is much less important. The statistical summary of the trade of France for 1852, published by authority, make the declared value of the imports & exports amount together to 3,110,000,000 of francs, or $561,420,000, of which, the exports are put down at $302,000,000, & the imports at $259,000,000. There entered the ports of France in 1852, 18,702 vessels, the tonnage of which amounted to 2,429,704; cleared same year, 16,398 vessels of 1,893,228 tons. The principal ports are Marseille, Havre, Bordeaux, Nantes, La Rochelle, Dunkerque, Boulogne, Dieppe, St. Malo, L'Orient, Bayonne, and Cette. The countries with which the chief commercial relations are conducted, are the French colonies, Belgium, Switzerland, Sardinia, England, Germany, Spain, & especially the United States of America, the imports from, & exports to which, amounts to 1-4th of the whole external commerce of the country.

In ancient times France formed the greater part of Transalpine Gaul. It was subjugated by Cæsar in the year 50 B.C., & formed 17 Roman provs. In the 5th century, the Franks established themselves in the N., the Burgundians in the E., & the Visigoths in the S. In the 6th century, the Franks extended their dominions nearly over the whole of Gaul, but Brittany, Gascony, and Languedoc preserved their independence. The power of the Franks continued to increase, and, under Charlemagne, at the end of the 8th century, their empire extended in Germany N. to the Elbe, & S.E. to the Theiss, in Italy to Volturno, & in Spain to the Ebro. This empire was partitioned in the middle of the 9th cent., when Germany detached itself from Gaul, which last was divided into two parts.—I. The kingdom of France, comprised between the Ocean, the Pyrenées, the Mediterranean, the Rhône, Saône, Meuse, & Scheldt.—II. Lotharingia, a long strip of territory between the Rhine & the Alps on one side, & the Scheldt, Meuse, Saône, & Rhône on the other; to this Italy was added. This state was soon again divided into the kingdom of Italy, Lorraine, & the kingdom of Provence or Burgundy, called also kingdom of Arles. These three states were successively united, nominally, to the Germanic Empire. The kingdom of France was also parcelled out into feudal duchies, and numerous seigneuries, so that the king had only an empty title before the family of Hugh Capet, who ascended the throne in 987, succeeded in uniting round their small territory the different states of France; this process of concentration progressed under succeeding reigns, and was completed at the revolution of 1798, which subjected to equal laws the 33 govs. or provs. of which the monarchy was then composed, & divided them into 83 departments. Avignon and Venassin, which had been in the possession of the Popes for 5 centuries, were soon after united to France. The wars of the revolution rapidly increased the territory of the French republic. Belgium, all the countries of Germany situated to the left of the Rhine, Savoy, and Nice, were conquered, & formed into 16 new departments. This state of matters, confirmed by the treaty of Lunéville in 1801, and by that of Amiens in 1802, gave to France its natural limits, those of anc. Transalpine Gaul; but the conquests of Napoleon overstepped these bounds,—his empire extended in Italy to Garigliano, in Germany to the mouths of the Elbe, in Illyria to the Save and Cattaro, & included Holland. The secondary states of Germany, Switzerland, the kingdoms of Naples & Spain became his vassals rather than his allies. This gigantic extension raised the whole of Europe against France, which, by the treaties of 1814–15, was again confined to its former limits. The most remarkable events in the history of France since the abdication of Napoleon are, the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815, the abdication of Charles X. in 1830, the election of Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, as king of the French in 1830, the revolution & his abdication in February 1848, the proclamation of a republic, and the election of Louis Napoleon as president in 1849; subsequently (Dec. 2d. 1851), Louis Napoleon, aided by the army, proclaimed the Empire, & finally suppressed every vestige of the republic. The language employed in the acts of administration is the French, which is spoken by all the educated classes, & understood by nearly all the pop. The patois of many of the deps. are only corrupt dialects of the French; but German is spoken in Alsace & part of Lorraine, Flemish in part of the dep. Nord, bas-breton in Brittany, Basque in Lower Pyrénées, & Italian in Corsica. The majority of the pop. are Rom. Catholics; about 1,000,000 belong to the Reformed church; there are 500,000 Lutherans, and 70,000 Jews. France is now divided into 86 deps., 85 of which are on the continent, & the island of Corsica forms the 86th. These were formed from the 32 provs. which existed previous to 1798, & named from the rivs., mntns., & other peculiar features which occur in them. The deps. are subdivided into arronds., cants., & comms.; each dep. is gov. by a prefect, each arrond. by a sub-prefect, and each comm. by a mayor. There are 80 Roman Catholic dioceses, each administered by an archbishop or a bishop, & each cap. of a canton has a curate, each diocese has a seminary under the direction of the bishop. The Lutherans have a general consistory established at Strasbourg, where they have also a seminary & a faculty of theology. The Calvinists have consistorial churches in 59 deps., who meet occasionally in synod, and have a faculty of theology at Montauban. The Jews have a central consistory at Paris, and synagogues at Paris, Strasbourg, Colmar, Metz, Nancy, Bordeaux, & Marseille. For the administration of justice, the country is divided into 27 ressorts de cours national; there is in each canton a juge de paix, & in each arrond. a tribunal of premiere instance. In each chief commercial town there is a tribunal of commerce. The faculty of theology has six schools; at Paris, Aix, Bordeaux, Lyon, Rouen, & Toulouse; a Lutheran school at Strasbourg, & a Calvinist school at Montauban. The faculty of law has 9 schools, at Paris, Aix, Caen, Dijon, Gre-noble, Poitiers, Rennes, Strasbourg, & Toulouse. The faculty of medicine has 3 schools of medicine; at Paris, Montpellier, & Strasbourg, & 3 schools of pharmacy in the same cities. Secondary instruction is given in national & communal colleges. There is a national college in most of the large cities, & communal colleges in numerous other towns. A normal school is established in Paris for training teachers in the sciences & belles lettres. Primary instruction is imparted gratuitously in numerous schools supported by the comms., and the teachers for these are trained in the normal schools. The number of pupils average 1 to 11 of the pop. For military purposes, France is partitioned into 21 divisions, of which each department forms a subdivision, except Corsica, which forms 2 subdivisions. For the marine, France is divided into 5 maritime prefectures, which are subdivided into arronds. & inscriptions. The administration of forests is divided into 32 arronds., embracing the principal towns in the different deps. In 1853, the French army consisted of 404,500 men, of whom 60,000 were cavalry. At the same date the navy comprised 40 ships of the line, 50 frigates, 40 corvettes, 50 brigs, 46 transports and boats, in all 226 sailing vessels & 102 steamers, comprising 10 frigates, 40 corvettes, and 52 smaller vessels. These vessels, when completely manned for actual service, require a force of 28,500 men. The revenue of France, in 1852, was estimated at 1,449,413,604 fr., and the expenses at 1,503,398,846 fr. Public debt in 1851, 5,345,637,860 fr. For comparison with other countries of Europe, (see Europe, p. 600.)

Situated on the right bank of Kentucky r., 60 miles above its entrance into Ohio river, on a semi-circular alluvial plain, from 150 to 200 feet lower than the table land in the rear. The river is here about 80 yards wide, & after heavy rains, frequently rises sixty feet. It contains a state house, of rough marble, 86 by 54 feet, with a handsome Grecian Ionic portico in front, a court house, jail, the state penitentiary, 2 banks, cap. $350,000; an academy, 5 churches,—1 Baptist, 1 Episcopal, 1 Methodist, 1 Presbyterian, & 1 Roman Catholic,—a market house, a theatre, 25 stores, 3 bagging fac., and various manufacturing establishments, 7 printing offices issuing 1 daily, 4 weekly, 1 monthly, and 1 semi-monthly publications. The streets are regular, and the houses are neat, and many of them elegant. Steamboats of 300 tons come up to this place when the water is high, and a large amount of foreign goods is brought here, & widely supplied to the rich and fertile country around. It is supplied with water from a spring 2 m. distant, brought in iron pipes, & distributed throughout the place. The banks of the r. here are high, and a chain bridge crosses it to the flourishing village of South Frankfort, which may be regarded as an appendage, though its population is not included in the above. Large vessels, designed to navigate the ocean, have been built here, & floated to New Orleans. Frankfort was founded in 1786, and it became the seat of government of the state in 1792.

Principal edifices, the Römer or old palace in which the Emperors of Germany were elected; the Thurm & Taxis palace, & place of meeting of the diet; the cathedral, founded during the Carlovingian dynasty, Lutheran high church, many other churches, 2 synagogues, the Saalkof, a modern imperial palace, house of the Teutonic order in Sachsenhausen, Haus zum Braunfels or exchange, 2 hospitals, the lunatic asylum, theatre, academy of painting, containing a good collection of pictures, and with the town museum, occupying a handsome new building, and the Senkenberg museum with Rüppell's African collection. Frankfort has a college, a medical institute, & numerous public schools; a public library with 60,000 volumes; several learned, scientific, & literary institutions, including a geographical society, inst. 1836, many private collections of paintings, & in a private garden here is Dannecker's famous statue of Ariadne. Outside of the Friedburg gate is a colossal monument to the Hessians who fell there in defending Frankfort in 1794. Manufs. very various, comprise carpets, table covers, oil-cloth, cotton & silk fabrics, woollen yarn & stuffs, gold & silver articles, tobacco, playing-cards, & printer's black; and here are many printing, stereotyping, & lithographic establishments. Frankfort was made a free port in 1831, is also one of the 4 great emporiums for supplying Germany with all kinds of merchandise; but its principal source of wealth is in extensive banking, commission, & funding transactions. It communicates by railroads with Carlsruhe, Mainz, and Wiesbaden, also with Paris & Calais, via Cologne; & has a regular traffic with steam-packets on the Main. Two large fairs are held here annually, viz., at Easter & Michaelmas; Charlemagne held a council in Frankfort in 794; it was fortified in 838, in 843, & erected into a free city in 1154. Napoleon made it cap. of a grand duchy. Goethe was born here, 28th August, 1749. The third Continental Peace Congress was held at Frankfort on the 22d of August, 1850, & on the two following days. The territory belonging to Frankfort, inclosed by Hesse & Nassau, has an area of 30 sq. m., & lies immediately around the city walls on both sides of the Main, forming for the most part a productive flat, the soil of which is composed of a mixture of sand and decomposed volcanic rocks. The government is vested in a senate, composed of 42 members, chosen in the first instance by all Christian citizens, not under legal incapacity. As a member of the confederation, Frankfort unites with the other three free cities in holding the 17th place in the Diet, & has only one vote in common with them in the lesser council, but has a full vote to itself in the plenum. Its contingent of men to the confederation is 1,024. Revenue, 1853, 1,655,200 florins; expenditure, 1,686,139 florins. FUCA, JUAN DE, strait of, Washington ter., including the waters of Admiralty Inlet, Hood Canal, & Puget Sound, with the archipelago of Arro up to the 49th parallel, were all surveyed by the United States Exploring Expedition. The whole is unsurpassed by any estuary in the world. They comprise many very fine harbors and safe anchorages, are entirely free from dangers, and cover an area of about 2,000 square miles. The country by which these waters are surrounded is remarkably salubrious, and offers every advantage for the accommodations of a vast commercial and military marine, with conveniences for docks and many sites for towns and cities, at all times well supplied with water, & capable of being provided with all needful supplies from the surrounding country, which is well adapted for agriculture. This strait is 95 miles in length; average width 11 miles (entrance 8 miles in width); no dangers exist, and it may be safely navigated throughout. The winds blow for the greater part of the year from the westward, and at times strongly. The shores are bold, & anchorage is to be found in but few places; at some parts no bottom is to be obtained even within a boat's length of the shore, with sixty fathoms of line. The north shore (Vancouver Island), is rocky, and composed of conglomerate and a reddish granite. On this side there are several inlets, in which are anchorages; among them Port San Juan and Victoria. Victoria is a snug harbor, and a most important position. There is an inner & outer basin, sufficiently commodious for large ships of war. Vancouver Island rises abruptly, & is very much broken by mountain ranges, but well covered with timber. It is 240 miles long & 30 miles wide.

Neah, or Scarborough Harbor, on the south side of the strait, just within Cape Flattery, is but a small indentation in the coast, which is partly sheltered on the N.E. by Neah Island. This is the position where the Spaniards attempted to establish themselves in 1792, & the remains of the old fort are still in existence. It offers a tolerably safe & convenient anchorage, though exposed to north-west gales. New Dungeness is a safe roadstead, & lies eighty miles from Cape Flattery, E. by S. true, the trend of the strait being E. by S., & W. by N. nearly. The point of New Dungeness is well adapted for the position of a light-house; it projects into the strait, & would be seen a long distance both up & down. The water close to the point is deep; a vessel may approach to within a quarter of a mile, and after turning it, safe and secure anchorage may be had in from ten to fifteen fathoms of water. It is extensive enough to accommodate a very large fleet. Budd Harbor lies adjoining it, and is connected with the roadstead of New Dungeness by a narrow channel, which has a depth of 2½ fathoms, & may be easily deepened if necessary. It is a fine and very capacious harbor, being 4 miles long, & 1½ wide, and perfectly secure at all times for repairs.

Port Discovery, 7 miles to the south-east of New Dungeness, is very easy of access, and well protected by high precipitous banks, the anchorage is close to the shore in 27 fathoms of water. The name of Port Discovery was given by Vancouver. It is 7 miles long, 1½ average breadth, & its points, which terminate in low sandy projections, interlock each other. Protection Island covers it completely to the north, & would render it easily defensible against a formidable attack. Port Townsend, at the entrance of Admiralty Inlet, is a fine sheet of water, 3½ m. long, & 1½ in width. This bay is free from dangers, & is well protected in the direction from which stormy winds blow. It has anchorage of a convenient depth, & there is abundance of fresh water to be had; the best anchorage is on the north side. The soil in this place is a light sandy loam, very productive. Port Lawrence is just at the junction of Admiralty Inlet & Hood Canal; it is a convenient anchorage, & is separated from one of the arms of Port Townsend by a narrow strip of land. Passing the entrance to Hood Canal, and up Admiralty Inlet, there are several anchorages where a vessel may await tide in beating up; such as Pilot & Apple-Tree Cove. Port Madison is a fine harbor, and affords every possible convenience for shipping. It is on the west side of the inlet, & communicates on the south by a ship channel with Port Orchard, which is one of the most extensive & beautiful of the many fine harbors on these inland waters, and is perfectly protected from the winds. The only danger is a reef of rocks nearly in the middle of the entrance from Admiralty Inlet. It includes 3 arms, the most northern of which, though entered by a narrow channel, is from ½ to 1½ mile in width, & extends for a distance of 6 miles. The shores are covered with a large growth of trees, with here and there a small prairie. The soil is superior to that of most places around the sound, and is capable of yielding almost any production of the temperate zone. Vashon Island lies in Admiralty Inlet, above Port Orchard, & has a ship channel on both sides of it. Commencement bay lies at the bottom of Admiralty Inlet, on the east channel. It affords good temporary anchorage, and a supply of wood and water can be obtained. There is a small stream emptying into it, called by the Indians Puyallup. The Narrows, which connect Admiralty Inlet with Puget Sound, are 1 m. wide, and 4½ long. The tide here runs with great velocity, causing many whirlpools & eddies, through which a ship is carried with great rapidity, the danger appearing to be imminent. The banks rise nearly perpendicular, & are composed of sand stone. Point Defiance, on the east, commands all the approaches to it. Puget Sound is a collection of inlets, covering an area of 15 sq. m., the only entrance to which is through the Narrows, which, if strongly fortified, would be almost impregnable. The inlets in the order in which they come from the entrance, have received the names of Carr, Case, Hammersley, Totten, Eld, Budd, and Henderson. They are united by passages, which form several islands and peninsulas. All these inlets are safe & commodious, & capacious harbors well supplied with water, & the land around them fertile. Nine miles from the Narrows is Nisqually. Here the anchorage is very much contracted, in consequence of the rapid shelving of the bank, that soon drops off into deep water. The shore rises abruptly to a height of 200 feet, & on the top of the ascent is an extended plain on which Fort Nisqually is built. Case Inlet extends to within two miles of the waters of Hood Canal. Hood Canal extends for a distance of 40 miles in a southwest direction, & then turns to the north-east for ten miles, approaching the waters of Puget Sound, with an average width of 2 miles. It contains several good harbors, viz., Port Ludlow, Port Gamble, Suquamish & Seabock Harbor and Dabop Bay. On the east side of Admiralty Inlet, as well as at the head of De Fuca Strait & the waters within the Gulf de Arro as far as Point Roberts, in lat. 49° N., there are many fine harbors & bays, formed by the islands & projecting headlands, viz., Commencement Bay, Elliot Bay, [Port Gardner, Port Susan, Holmes Harbor, Penn Cove,] Hornet Harbor, Strawberry Bay, Billingham & Birch Bays. Those within the brackets lie within Whidby Island. The Naval Archipelago, between the Canal de Arro & Ringgold Channel, offers many fine anchorages. The Gulf of Georgia and Johnson Strait are not well adapted for navigation, in consequence of the rapidity of the tides, and the many sunken rocks at the northern outlet. The harbors within them, both on the main land & Vancouver Island, are useless on account of the great depth of water & the perpendicular banks. Not a shoal exists within the strait of Juan de Fuca, Admiralty Inlet, Puget Sound, or Hood Canal that can in any way interrupt their navigation by a seventy-four gun ship. The shores of all the inlets & bays are remarkably bold, so much so, that in many places a ship's side would strike the shore before the keel would touch the ground. Some few of them have creeks emptying into them, with water sufficient to turn mills. These creeks all have extensive mud-flats at their entrances, with fertile prairies at their heads and along their banks. The spring tides rise 18 feet; those of the neap 12 feet, affording every facility for the construction of dry docks, &c. The country on all these salt water inlets is said to be remarkably healthy. The winter is represented to be mild, & but of short duration, & the channels and harbors are never obstructed by ice.

GALICIA, an old prov. of Spain, with the title of kingdom, & since 1833, forming the provs. of Coruña, Lugo, Orense, & Pontevedra, at the N.W. extremity of the peninsula, between lat. 41° 50′ & 43° 50′ N., & lon. 6° 50′ & 9° 15′ W. Area, 15,897 sq. ms. Pop. 1,472,786. Surface generally mountainous; principal rivers, the Minho, Sil, & Ulla. Coast line very irregular, & presents the capes Finisterre, Ortegal, & Estaca, with the bays of Ferrol, Betanzos, Coruña, Pontevedra, & Vigo. Climate temperate; rain more abundant than in any other part of Spain. Forests extensive, & feed large herds of hogs; there are also good pasture lands, & wide tracts of heath. Chesnuts, maize, rye, flax, potatoes, wheat, barley, & inferior wine, form the principal vegetable products; the first compose most part of the food of the Galicians; the rest are partly exported. Sheep & horses are extensively reared. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, tin, antimony, marble, & jasper. Some pilchard-fisheries are carried on, & a few unimportant manufs. of woollens, linens, sailcloth, &c. The mass of the Galicians, or Gallegos, are very poor, ignorant, & uncivilized, but hardy and industrious; & they make the best agricultural laborers, soldiers, & domestic servants in the peninsula. Many emigrate yearly into other parts of Spain & Portugal; & the porters & water-carriers of Madrid, Lisbon, &c., are usually from this part of Spain. Cap. city, Santiago.

GALICIA and LODOMERIA, or AUSTRIAN POLAND (German Galizien and Lodomerien), a kingdom or prov. of the Austrian Empire, cap. Lemberg, lies in the form of a terrace on the N. slope of the Carpathian mntns. It is bounded W. by Silesia, S. by Hungary & Transylvania, E. by Moldavia & Russia, & N. by Russia, Poland, & Prussia. Area, 33,538 sq. ms. Pop. 1850, 455,477. The chief rivs. are the Vistula with its affls., the Biala, Wyslocka, & San; the Bug, Dneister, & Pruth; there are numerous small lakes in the Carpathians. The surface in the N. comprises wide & fertile plains, while in the S. it is covered with sandstone hills, which spread out from the Carpathians far into the interior. Climate the most rigorous in the empire, on account of the continuous chain of mntns. which interrupt the mild southerly breezes. Summer is of short duration, & winter, which is very cold, last six months. Mean annual temp. in the plain 45° Fahr. The principal crops are oats, wheat, barley, & maize. Flax, hemp, & tobacco are also cultivated. Cattle are extensively reared, & horses are numerous, & of a hardy breed. Sheep & horses are the chief stock in the Bukowina (the S.E. part of the kingdom). Bees are extensively kept, & honey & wax are exported. Minerals comprise marble, alabaster, sulphur, iron, coal, copper, zinc, but the most remarkable mineral production is fossil salt, the bed of which extends for 285 m. along the Carpathians from E. to W., and which, in the salt works of Wieliczka & Bochnia, has been worked since A.D. 1300; & there are numerous mineral springs. The only manufs. of importance are spinning & weaving flaxen & hempen fabrics. Brandy distilleries are numerous. The inhabs. are of Slavonic origin, & speak the Polish language; there are 2,236,765 Roman Catholics, 2,194,911 belong to the Greek church, 32,704 Protestants, & 328,806 Jews. Education is in a backward state, but there is a university at Lemberg; there are numerous hospitals & charitable institutions; the chief criminal court is at Lemberg. The province is divided into 3 arrondissements of Cracovia, Lemberg, & Stanislau. Galicia, formerly comprised in Red Russia, derives its name from Galitz or Halicz, a town on the Dneister, which was cap. of an indep. principality in the middle ages, & Lodomeria takes its name from Vladimir in Volhynia, which was also cap. of a duchy. This country, which was long possessed by the Poles, was made over to Austria in the partition of the country in 1772 & 1795.

GANGES, the principal river of Hindostan, through the N. part of which it flows from W. to E., traversing the centre of the British presids. Bengal & Agra, almost in their entire length. It rises by two principal heads, Bhagirathi and Alakananda, in lat. 31° N., and lon. 7° E., from an immense mass of snow at an elevation of 15,000 feet; flows at first S.W. to Hurdwar, and thenceforward mostly E.S.E. to the Bay of Bengal, which it enters by numerous mouths, its E.most arm uniting with the Megna or Brahmaputra, and its W. branch being the Hooghly riv. Total course estimated at 1,500 m. In its course it receives 11 affluents, some of which are equal to the Rhine, and none smaller than the Thames; the principal are the Jumna, Ramganga, Goomty, Gogra, Sone, Gunduck, Koose, Mahanuddy, & Teesta, which have courses varying from 300 to 600 m. in length. On its banks are numerous cities and towns. Between Hurdwar & Allahabad it is usually from 1 m. to 1¼ m. across; below which its breadth increases frequently to 3 m., & at 500 m. from the sea it is 30 feet in depth, and so continues to near its mouth, where, however, the quantity of deposit it brings down often forms bars and shoals. In the annual overflow of the river, when it is at its height in July and August, the waters rise to 32 feet. The annual deposit of mud at its delta is estimated at 6,000,000,000 cubic feet. GENEVA, (Fr. Geneve, Germ. Genf, Ital. Ginevra), a walled town of Switzerland, cap. cant. same name, 83 m. S.W. Bern, finely situated on the Rhone, at its outlet from the W. extremity of the Lake of Geneva. Lat. of old observatory 46° 12′ N., lon. 6° 9′ 5″ E. Elev. 1,230 ft. Mean tem. of year 52°.7; winter 34°; sum. 66° .4 Fahr. Geneva, the most populous and industrious town in Switzerland, is the seat of the central administration of the canton, & has a Gothic cathedral, a university academy, founded by Calvin in 1368, with a faculty of theology, laws, sciences, & letters; a college with 16 professors & teachers, school of arts & manufs., a public library of 40,000 vols., & a large collection of curious MSS., a botanic garden, begun by de Candolle in 1816, observatory, museum of natural history, Calvinist, Lutheran, & Roman Catholic churches, & a synagogue. Many learned societies & benevolent institutions. The Rhone divides the town into 2 parts, the smaller portion on rt. b. is called the Quartier St. Gervais, the principal seat of trade; between them is "the island," a favorite promenade, with a statue of Rousseau, & commanding a fine view of the lake, connected with the town by several bridges. A hydraulic machine raises the water of the Rhone for the supply of the public fountains. The principal manufs. of Geneva are watches, musical boxes, chronometers, mathematical instruments, jewellery, cutlery, firearms, & musical instruments. The manuf. of watches employs 3,000 workmen, the annual produce being 100,000 watches, nearly all gold. Geneva has an excellent quay along the river, an active transit trade on the lake, & steam conveyances with Villeneuve, Coppet, Nyon, Rolles, Ouchy, & Vevey. Few towns of its extent have produced, or adopted, so many learned men, as Geneva; among these are Calvin, Beza, Cranmer, Lesage, Saussure, de Luc, Lefort, Necker, and Rousseau. John Knox was long a resident here. Geneva, one of the chief towns of the Allobroges in the time of Cæsar, was subject to the Romans till the beginning of the 5th century. It was cap. of the 2d kingdom of Bourgogne till 1034, & was under the sovereignty of the Emperor of Germany till the beginning of the 16th cent. Calvin introduced the reformation here in 1535, & from that time Geneva, a free city, was considered the chief seat of Calvinism. It was taken by the French in 1798, & formed, till 1813, cap. of the dep. Leman in the French Empire. In 1814, along with a small territory, it joined the Helvetic confed.—The Canton of Geneva is composed of the former republic of Geneva & part of the county of Gex in Savoy, bounded N. by the cant. Vaud, S. by Savoy, E. by the Lake of Geneva, & W. by France (dep. Ain.) Area, 91 sq. m. Pop. 1850, 63,932, of whom 34,212 Protestants, & 29,764 Catholics. Surface undulating, but not mntnous.; soil fertile & well cultivated. Climate mild & healthy. In 1843, 7,258 persons, men, women, & children, were employed in the canton in watch making & jewellery.—II. (Lake of, or Lake Lemans, Germ. Genfer-See, anc Lacus Lemanus), a lake of Europe, between Switzerland & the Sardinian sta. It is crescent-shaped; length 45 m.; breadth from 1 to 9½ m.; area 82 sq. m.; height above the sea 1,230 feet; & greatest depth near its E. Extremity 984 feet. It is traversed by the Rhone from E. to W., & receives the Drause, Venoge, & other small rivs. Its waters have a peculiar deep blue color, are very transparent, & contain a great variety of fish; it is never wholly frozen over; & it is subject to seiches, or remarkable risings of from 1 to 4 or 5 feet, which last only about 25 minutes. Its banks are highly picturesque, the S. being bold & lofty, & the N. undulating & richly cultivated. Steam navigation was introduced in 1823.

GENOA (Ital. Genova, Fr. Genes, anc. Genua), a famous fortified seaport city of N. Italy, Sard. sta., cap. div., at the head of the Gulf of Genoa, Mediterranean, 79 m. S.E. Turin. Lat. of light-house 44° 24′ 18″ N., lon. 8° 54′ 24″ E. Pop. 1848, 100,382. Mean temp. of year 75° .1; winter 47° .3; summer 75° .1 Fahr. The port, protected seaward by two vast moles, is surrounded landward by the city; which extends up the slope of a mountain amphitheatre, successively enclosed by two series of walls, outside of which are numerous elegant country houses; the whole embraced by a line of detached forts & outworks, crowning the hills for a circuit of about 7 m. In the older part of the city the streets are steep & very narrow, but in the newer portions broad & strait; & they are generally clean, well paved, & lined by lofty & magnificent edifices. Genoa has justly acquired the title "la Superba," for, though possessing fewer remains of anc. splendor than Venice, it exhibits more wealth & comfort. Among its principal edifices are the Doria-Pamfili, the Royal Ducal, Brignole, Durazzo, Serra, Spinola, Balbi, Pallavicini, & numerous other fine palaces, all rich in choice works of art; the cathedral, a gorgeous Saraceno-Gothic structure of the 11th century, numerous other handsome churches (though many were destroyed by the French), the university, with a large library & botanic garden, the Albergo de Poveri, a vast asylum for about 1,600 poor persons, two other large hospitals, 15 conservatorie, or female asylums, numerous convents, the exchange, bank of St. George, one of the most ancient & celebrated in Europe, arsenal, light-house, quays, & a bridge over a part of the city. Genoa is an archbp's see, the residence of a general commandant, & the seat of an admiralty council, and a tribunal & chamber of commerce. It has a royal college, a naval & various other schools, & important manufactures of velvet, silks, damask thrown silk, paper, soap, &c., with marble, alabaster, & coral works. It is a free port, & the great entrepôt of a large extent of country, the produce of which, comprising olive oil, rice, fruits, cheese, rags, steel, &c., with manufactured goods, form the chief exports. Principal imports, cotton and woollen stuffs, cotton wool from Egypt, corn, salt, fish, colonial & Baltic produce, hardwares and tin plates from England, wool, tobacco, lead, wax, &c. From the 11th down to the 18th century, Genoa was, with some interruptions, the cap. of a famous commercial republic, which planted numerous colonies in the Levant & on the shores of the Black Sea; but the annals of which are marked by the greatest turbulence. It was taken by the French in 1797, and ceded to the King of Sardinia in 1815. Pop. of prov. 1848, exclusive of the city, 184,851.—II. (Gulf of), a wide bay of the Mediterranean, N. of Corsica, and S. of the Sar. sta., forming an angle, near the summit of which Genoa is situated. It receives numerous small rivers. The Gulf of Spezzia is its chief inlet.

It is 300 miles long from N. to S., & 240 broad, containing 58,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1790 was 82,584; in 1800, 162,686; in 1810, 252,433; in 1820, 348,989; in 1830, 516,567; in 1840, 691,392; & in 1850, 909,644. The state in 1850 was divided into 95 counties.

From the ocean for a distance of seven miles, there is a chain of islands intersected by rivers, creeks, & inlets, communicating with each other, & forming an inland navigation for vessels of 100 tons burden along the whole coast. These islands consist of salt marsh and land of a gray rich soil, which produces sea-island cotton of a superior quality. The coast on the main land for four or five miles is a salt marsh. Back of this there is a narrow margin of land, nearly resembling that of the islands; these are partially or wholly overflowed at the return of the tide, & constitute the rice plantations. Then commence the pine barrens, which reach from 60 to 90 miles from the coast. Beyond this is the country of sand hills, 30 or 40 miles wide, interspersed with fertile tracts, & extending to the lower falls of the rivers. The part of the state above the falls of the rivers is called the Upper Country, & has generally a strong & fertile soil, often inclining to a red color, & further inland it is mixed with a deep black mould, producing cotton, tobacco, Indian corn, wheat, & other kinds of grain. Black walnut & mulberry trees grow abundantly in this soil. The forests produce oak, pine, hickory & cedar. Deposits of iron ore are widely diffused throughout the state; gold is found in the northern part; granite, marble, limestone, are quarried in many places.

There were in this state in 1850, 6,378,479 acres of land improved, & 16,442,900 of unimproved land in farms; cash value of farms, $95,753,445, & the value of implements & machinery, $5,894,150. Live Stock, &c.—Horses, 151,331; asses & mules, 57,379; milch cows, 334,223; working oxen, 73,286; other cattle, 690,019; sheep, 560,435; swine, 2,168,617; value of live stock, $25,728,416; of slaughtered animals, $6,339,762.

Agricultural Products, &c.—Wheat, 1,088,534 bush.; rye, 53,750; Ind. corn, 30,080,099; oats, 3,820,044; barley, 11,501; buckwheat, 250; peas & beans, 1,142,011; potatoes, 227,379; sweet potatoes, 6,986,428; rice, 88,950,691 pounds; value of products of the orchard, $92,776; produce of market gardens, $76,500; pounds of butter made, 4,640,559; of cheese, 46,976; sugar, hhds., 1,642; maple sugar, 50 pounds; molasses, 216,150 gallons; bees wax & honey, 732,514 pounds; wool, pounds produced, 990,019; cotton, 499,091 bales; flax, 5,387 pounds; silk cocoons, 813; hops, 261 pounds; tobacco, 423,924; hay, tons of, 23,449; clover seeds, 132 bushels; other grass seeds, 428; flax seed, 622 bushels; and were made 796 gallons of wine. Value of home made manufactures, $1,838,968.

The rivers are the Savannah, 600 miles long, bounding the state on the N.E., navigable for ships seventeen miles to Savannah, & a part of the year for steamboats 250 miles to Augusta; the Altamaha, which is navigable for large vessels 12 miles to Darien, is formed by the junction of the Oconee & the Ocmulgee, and is navigable for sloops of 30 tons by the former to Dublin 300 miles from the ocean, the Ogeechee 200 miles long, & navigable for sloops 40 m. Flint r., which rises in the N.W. part of the state, & after a course of more than 200 miles, joins the Chattahoochee, forming the Apalachicola; the Chattahoochee, on the west border of the state, which is navigable 300 miles by steamboat to Columbus; the St. Mary's river is in the south-west part of the state.

The principal places in the state are Savannah, the metropolis; Milledgeville, the cap.; Augusta, Athens, Macon, Columbus, Atlanta, Griffin, Oglethorpe, Dahlonega, Whitesville, Walkinsville, &c. The State Penitentiary is at Milledgeville.

Government.—The first constitution of Georgia was framed in 1777, a second in 1785, & the present in 1798, & amended in 1839. The governor is elected by the people, & holds his office two years. The senate consists of 47 members, one for each district, composed of two counties, except the counties containing the largest pop., which elects one member. The House of Representatives is composed of 130 members; the 37 counties having the largest number of inhabitants are entitled to 2 members each, & the remainder 1 each. The legislature meets biennially on the first Monday of November (odd years) at Milledgeville. All the free white male inhabitants who shall have resided within the county in which they vote six months preceding the election, & shall have paid taxes in the state for the year previous, have the right of suffrage.

The judges of the Superior Court are elected for three years by the legislature, & the judges of the inferior courts & justices of the peace are elected annually by the people.

The charter of Georgia, granted by George II. in 1732, included, besides the present state of Georgia, the states of Alabama & Mississippi, although they were claimed & possessed by the French until 1763. The first settlement was at Savannah in 1733 by Oglethorpe, consisting of 130 persons, who held the lands on a military tenure. In 1752, the proprietary government was abolished, and Georgia became a royal colony. At the commencement of the revolutionary war, Georgia took an active part with the other colonies in favor of independence, & during its continuance contributed largely of means and forces. Georgia suffered from the Creek Indians on her frontiers until the treaty of 1790. In convention Georgia adopted the constitution of the United States Jan. 2, 1788, by a unanimous vote.

GEORGIA, or GRUSIA, a gov. of Russia, in the Caucasus country, W. Asia, composing the central portion of the Transcaucasia, between lat. 40° & 42° 30′ N., & lon. 43° & 47° E. Area, 21,500 sq. m. Pop. 400,000, mostly Christians of the Greek Church. Surface generally mountainous, but its centre, traversed by the Kur & its affls., is an undulating & very fertile plain. Corn of numerous kinds, pomegranates & other fine fruits, madder, flax, hemp, cotton, & wine, are among the principal products; wine is naturally good, but ill prepared, & a great quantity is consumed in Georgia. Forest extensive, & consist of most of the trees common in Europe, but they are turned to little profit. Coal, iron, naphtha, & other valuable minerals are supposed to be abundant, but few mines are wrought. The houses, vehicles, &c., are of the rudest kinds, & education in every respect is very backward. Some woollen, cotton, & silk fabrics, leather, shagreen, &c., are made, & the arms produced at Teflis have some reputation, but except these, the wares manufactured are very inferior. The Georgians are a peculiarly handsome race of people, & the females were formerly sold in large numbers to supply the harems of the Turks & Persians, but the Russians have put an end to this traffic. The Georgian language resembles that of Armenia, with the addition of many foreign words. Principal towns, Teflis the cap., Elisabetpol, Gori, and Telar. Georgia was annexed to Russia in 1802. (See pop. Russia.)

GERMANY (German Deutschland, French Allemagne, ancient Germania), a country of Central Europe, between lat. 44° 48′ & 54° 50′ N., & lon. 6° and 20° E.; within these limits it comprises all the countries belonging to the late Germanic confederation, consisting of 38 sovereignties (including four free cities); bounded N. by the German Ocean, Denmark, & the Baltic; E. by Prussian Posen, Poland, Galicia, Hungary, & Croatia; S. by Istria, the Adriatic, Italy and Switzerland; W. by France, Belgium, and the Netherlands. Area, 244,634 sq. ms., of which 600 m. is washed by the German Ocean & the Baltic, & 25 m. by the Adriatic. Germany is divided naturally into three regions,—the upper or S. region, the middle or the region of plateau, & the lower or N. region. The chain of the Alps, which covers the whole of the S. part, comprises five principal groups,—on the Rhetian Alps, the chief ramifications of which follow the course of the Inn on the N., & branch out to the Bavarian Alps & the mountains of Vorarlberg, & extend W. to the Lake of Constance & the Schwarzwald, near the source of the Danube. Culminating points, Ortler Spitz, & Doediberg.—II. the Noric Alps, over an extent of 130 m., the contreforts of which form the Styrian & Austrian Alps, extending to the Danube. Culminating point, Gross Glockner, 12,425 feet.—III. Carnic Alps, between the sources of the Drave & the Col de Saisnitz. Culminating point, Marmolata, 11,483 feet.—IV. Julian Alps, from the Col de Saisnitz to Mount Kleek in Carniola, 143 m. Culminating point, Terglou, 11,154 feet.—V. Dinaric Alps, which are prolonged to Dalmatia & Herzegovina. The chain of the Carpathians commence at the mouth of the March in the Danube, & extend to the source of the Vistula, forming the S.E. confines of Germany. Culminating point, Lomnitzer Spitz, 8,779 feet. On the W. of Germany, & at the extremity of the Alpine range, which passes between the Danube & the Lake of Constance, a chain of heights extend N. to the plain of Westphalia, separating the basin of the Rhine from that of the other affluents of the German Ocean. Its principal masses are the Schwarzwald (Black Forest), between the valley of the Rhine & Neckar. Culminating point, the Feldberg. The Odenwald Rhöngebrige & the Vogelgebrige, the Taunus & Westerwald. On the S. of the Rhine, the chief mountains are Hardt & Hohenwald. The Fichtelgebrige in the N. of Bavaria, separates the basins of the affluents of the German Ocean and the Black Sea, & forms the nucleus of the Erzgebrige, the Böhmerwald, the German Jura, & the Thuringenwald. The whole of the country comprised between the mountains on the S., & the German Ocean & the Baltic on N., forms part of the great plain of N. Europe, and is traversed by great rivers, which extend W. to the Netherlands, & E. to Poland & Russia. The N. coasts are low, & require the protection of dykes, where not defended by sand hills; the N.W part, below the mouths of the Ems & Eider, is bathed by the German Ocean. The principal gulfs are the Dollart and the Jahde. The N.E. part, between the canal of the Eider and the outlet of Lake Tsarnowitz, is bathed by the Baltic. Its principal gulf is the Haff formed by the estuary of the Oder. On this coast, & separated from it by a narrow arm of the sea, are the 3 great isls. of Germany, Rügen, Usedom, & Wollin. The S. coasts, bathed by the Adriatic, are flat in the W., high & rocky in the E.

The waters of Germany flow N. to the German Ocean & the Baltic, S. to the Adriatic, & E. to the Black Sea. Its principal rivers, in the basin of the German Ocean, are the Rhine, with its affluents the Neckar, Main, Rednitz, Lahn, Sieg, Ruhr, & Lippe on right, & the Nahe, Moselle, Saar, & Sure on the left; the Ems, Weser, Werra, Fulda, Elbe, with its afflts. the Moldau, Eger, Mulde, Saale on left, & Iser, Alster Havel, on right; in the basin of the Baltic, the Oder, with its affluents the Oppa, Neissa, Katzbach on left, & Bartsch, Wartha, & Ihna on right; in the basin of the Black Sea, the Danube, with its affluents the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Traun, Ens, Leytha, Raab, Drave, & Save on right, and Wernitz, Altmuul, Naab, Regen, March, & Theiss on left. The chief canals are, the Plauen, connecting the Elbe & Oder by means of the Havel riv.; the Finow canal, between the Havel and Oder, the Fred. William canal, between the Oder and Spree; the Eider canal, connecting the Baltic & the North Sea; the Vienna canal, to connect the Danube with the Adriatic; & the Ludwigs canal, between the Rhine & Danube.

The lakes of Germany belong to the Alpine regions, in the basins of the Rhine & Danube on the S., & the plain of the Baltic on the N. There are few in the centre. The principal are in the Alps,—the Lake of Constance, the Chiem See, Wurm See, Ammet See, Lake of Gmunden, Aller See, Mond & Traun See, & the Werther & Zirknitz See. These are mostly deep basins, surrounded by mountains, as in Switzerland. The lakes of N. Germany are of quite an opposite character, being mostly shallow marshes in the nearly level plains. The chief of these are the Eutiner and Plöner See in Holstein: the Malchiner, Plauen, and Mauritz See in Mecklenburg; the Ruppiner & Ucker See in the Mark; & the Madue, Vilin, & Streizig See in Pomerania. Germany is partitioned into numerous small states, which form the Germanic confederation.

The climate of Germany is in general temperate and healthy; it varies greatly in different quarters. S. Germany, notwithstanding the heat of its valleys, is, on account of its elevation, proportionally colder than the more N. basins of the Rhine, Main, Neckar, Moselle, & Danube. Further N., the mountains of Central Germany separate the climates of the S. & N. In S. Germany the winters are short, & so mild that snow lies only a few days; summer sets in early, & the heat in the valleys is often excessive, and here maize, the chesnut, & the vine, flourish. In the N.W., the cold of the long winters is so severe, that the rivers & lakes are for months together covered with ice strong enough to bear loaded wagons, and the ground is for 3 or 4 months covered with deep snow.

The following table shows the extent & pop. of the countries (including portions of Austria, Prussia, Denmark, & the Netherlands):

† By a resolution of the Federal Diet (March 10th, 1853), the Federal Army was to be augmented to 5,000 men.

‡ The Quota Parts of the 30,000 florins have been fixed according to the law which was in force after 14th April, 1842, which showed the inhabitants of the countries of the Confederation to be 30,164,392. The distribution of the federal contingents in the army, the number of the contingents of troops, and the quota parts for the expenses of the Confederation, and the items contained in the last two columns, are according to the federal relations prior to March, 1848; since that they have been slightly modified.

§ The principalities of Hohenzollern-Hechingen and Sigmaringen have each a voice in full [plenum] Confederation, and participate in part of the 16th vote in the Diet.

The mineral riches of Germany are extensive and varied. Gold (in small quantity) and silver occur in Saxony, Bohemia, & in the Harz. Iron is widely distributed & very abundant. Copper to the extent of about 100,000 cwt. annually. Tin, lead, mercury (of which there are celebrated mines in Idra), bismuth, zinc, arsenic, cobalt, antimony; all kinds of building marble, & many of the precious stones; porcelain clay, coal, turf, & salt in numerous springs and rich mines, nearly 60 of which are in operation. Germany is celebrated for the number & variety of its mineral springs. The vegetable products of Germany comprise all kinds of cereals, the chief of which, in the N., are wheat, rye, barely, oats, & especially buckwheat; in the S., spelt & maize, garden produce of all kinds, and potatoes (which are best in the N.). The principal plants used in manufs. are flax, in Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, Hanover, Westphalia; hemp chiefly in S. Germany. Tobacco, hops, rape seed, poppy, madder, saffron, aniseed, coriander, liquorice; the cultivation of beet root for the manuf. of sugar, has been lately much extended. Fruit trees comprise the apple, pear, chesnut, almond, walnut, and apricot. The vine, first introduced by the Romans, is cultivated to lat. 51° N., but chiefly in the valley of the Middle Rhine and on the Danube, in Lower Austria, and in the valleys of the Mosel, Neckar, and Main. Timber is very extensively distributed, especially in the N.E., not only on the mountains (from the wooded character of which the word "Wald" (wood) is often used for mountain), but also in the plains. Pine prevails in the E., oak and beech in the W.

Germany is abundantly provided with all the useful domestic animals; horned cattle are excellent in Friesland & Franconia; horses in Holstein, Mecklenberg, & Hanover; sheep in Saxony, Silesia, Bohemia, and Thuringia; pigs in Westphalia, Mecklenburg, & Salzburg; asses and mules are not numerous. Among wild animals are the bear, the chamois, & the marmot in the Alps; the wolf is most abundant in the valley of the Rhine; the hamsters in the Harz; the lynx, fox, martin, & weazel generally. The eagle and vulture are chiefly found in the Alps; geese in Pomerania; pheasants in Bohemia. Fish are less abundant in the German rivers than formerly; the most common are carp, pike, perch, eels, and trout. Bees are very generally reared, especially in the northern meadows. The silkworm is not extensively cultivated.

The inhabs. of Germany belong chiefly to the Teutonic race and a mixture of the Slavonian. To the first, belong the pop. of Thuringia, Hesse, Franconia, Swabia, Bavaria, & part of Carinthia, Upper Styria, Austria, Tyrol, Brandenburg, the countries of the Middle and Lower Rhine, extending to France & the Netherlands, besides the Saxons in Westphalia, Holstein, Lower Saxony, & Friesland on the German Ocean; and to the second the inhabitants of Upper Saxony, Mecklenburg, Pomerania, Silesia, Moravia, Lausatia, part of Bohemia, Styria, & Carniola. The Magyars are a distinct race, probably of Finnish or Hunnish descent. Among these are mixed French, since the revocation of the edict of Nantes, & many Jews and Italians in the S. part of the Tyrol and Illyria. The rich & powerful German language is everywhere predominant; it is divided into high & low German, the first of which is the chief written language. With the exception of Jews, the pop. of Germany belong either to the Protestant or the Roman Catholic church. Protestants (Lutheran and Reformed) prevail in the N., and Roman Catholics in the S. General education in Germany is of a higher order than in any other country of Europe: in many of the states the common schools are excellent, especially in Saxony and Thuringia. In 1840, the 19 universities of Germany (exclusive of Austria) had 11,389 pupils. There are numerous gymnasia, lyceums, academies, learned societies, and richly-furnished public libraries in the different states. The advantages derived from these noble institutions are apparent in the great activity exhibited in every branch of literature & science, & in the importance of the German book trade. Architecture, printing, & the preparation of astronomical & optical instruments have attained great excellence. The chief branches of industry are agriculture, cattle rearing, & mining. Germany is not generally a manufacturing country, in so far as steam-power is concerned, but many parts, especially Silesia, Bohemia, Lausatia, Hanover, Westphalia, and Hesse, are distinguished for the Manuf. of linens. The other manufs. comprise woollens in Austria, Saxony, Rhenish Prussia; iron, steel, & other metals in Styria, Carinthia, Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, the Harz, Rhenish Prussia, & Nassau; gold & silver work in Augsburg; wooden wares, clocks, & toys in the Schwarzwald; glass in Bohemia; porcelain in Saxony, Prussia & Austria. Leather is an important manuf. all over Germany. Breweries and brandy distilleries are numerous, especially in the N. The manuf. of cotton is important in Rhenish Prussia, Saxony, and Lower Austria, and silk in Vienna, S. Tyrol, Berlin, & Cologne. Tobacco manufs. are numerous, and the manufs. of paper and straw goods are important. The trade of Germany, formerly greatly trammelled by the different rates of duties and customs levied by the separate states, has recently received a fresh impulse from the institution of the German commercial customs' union (Zollverein), by which the several states agree to a uniform rate of charges in transport duties & postages, and a fixed rate of exchange. This system was commenced by a few of the governments in 1828, since then, it has been joined by all the states of the empire, except Austria, Holstein, Hanover, Mecklenberg-Strelitz, and the free cities of Bremen, Hamburg, & Lubeck. Commerce is greatly facilitated by the numerous navigable rivers, all of which are traversed by steam-packets, and by an excellent system of railroads.

For 9 centuries previous to 1792, Germany formed an empire governed by a sovereign, elected by the different states. For the purpose of administration, the empire was divided into 10 circles, & comprised, besides the kingdom of Bohemia, the margravate of Moravia & the duchy of Silesia; its cap. was Vienna. The diet or general assembly of the empire, which was composed of three colleges, was convoked by the Emperor; he was assisted in the administration of affairs by the Aulic council, which exercised the functions of the supreme court of the empire. The conquests of the French, & the annexation of Belgium & the other countries on the lt. b. of the Rhine to France, led to the dissolution of the empire in 1806. This was replaced temporarily by the Confederation of the Rhine, which had for its object, mutual assistance & the maintenance of peace among the confederate parties, who consisted of the kings of Bavaria and Würtemberg, & several petty sovereigns. The Confederation was estab. at Paris 12th July 1806, under the protection of Napoleon. Its territory was from time to time considerably augmented, till its dissolution in 1813. In 1815 the congress of Vienna established the Germanic Confederation, composed of all the states of Germany, who formed an alliance to secure the integrity of their laws & their respective territories, and to maintain the peace and order of the whole. The different states contributed to the military force in proportion to their pop. The confederation was represented by an assembly, called the Diet, composed of deputies from the different states, the seat of which was at Frankfort on the Main. This state of matters continued till 1848, when an attempt was made to replace the German Diet by a representative parliament to meet at Frankfort on the Main. Such a body, composed of 500 representatives, did meet in Frankfort, March 30th, & drew up a plan of representation, in accordance with which the first German National Assembly was elected, & met likewise in Frankfort, May 18th, 1848. This Assembly elected Archduke John of Austria, to be Lord Lieutenant or Regent (Reichsverweser) of this newly-constituted German Empire. The same prince was in like manner elected Regent by the Diet, then sitting in Frankfort, & with this transaction the existence of the Diet may be said to have, for the time being at least, virtually terminated. The newly-constituted Assembly proceeded to form a Constitution for the German empire, which however, after being passed, was not recognized by several important states; dissensions ensued, & on May 30th 1849, the Assembly resolved to transfer its place of meeting to Stuttgart. But this resolution not being acquiesced in by the government, it resolved to remain in Frankfort, while a large body of the members withdrew to Stuttgart, where the so-called German Parliament was summoned for June 6. This was the final deathblow to that Assembly, which at one time seemed destined to play so important a part in German history. Subsequently to this period, Prussia endeavored to form a Confederation (Bund), with herself at the head of it. This plan was opposed by several states, including Austria, which last, proceeding to act on the old law of the Confederation, by which since 1815, the Diet of German states has been annually assembled at Frankfort, convoked the Diet, notwithstanding the remonstrances of Prussia. With exception of Prussia & Oldenburg, all the states obeyed the summons. Subsequently to this period the pretensions of Prussia to form & head a separate confederation, nearly involved Germany in a general war, which was, however, happily prevented. Meetings between the Ministers of Prussia & Austria took place, & differences were so far arranged that these two leading powers, with the concurrence of the other states, united in attempting to re-constitute the German Confederation, which was finally accomplished, & the Assembly Federal met at Frankfort, May 30, 1851.

The Zollverein or Customs League.—This celebrated commercial union was formed by Prussia, in order to unite the various German states for purposes of trade & commerce, by suppressing the rates & tariffs which each had established, & fixed both a uniform scale and mode of levying it, by means of which merchandise, after one fixed payment on the frontiers, might be transmitted over the country without the impediment & annoyance of new inspections & new payments on the frontiers of every separate state. Having no compulsory powers, Prussia could only adopt the form of a voluntary association, & endeavor to allure the different states into it by convincing them of its accordance with their true interests. This success has been very remarkable, as the preceding table will show.

GERMERSHEIM, Vicus Julius, a fortified town of Rhenish Bavaria, on the Rhine, at the influx of the Queich, 8 m. S. S.W. Spires. Pop. 2,200, employed in fishing, river navigation, & rural industry. It has a good harbor, with an extensive wharf, & a light-house. It contains 2 stores & a large warehouse. The Gibraltar & Clinton canal, a few miles of which are completed, affords, by its waste water, a good water power.

GIBRALTAR, a strongly fortified seaport town and colony of Great Britain, near the S. extremity of Spain, where it occupies a mountainous promontory, E. of its bay, & on the N. side of the Strait of Gibraltar, at the entrance of the Mediterranean, 60 m. S.E. Cadiz. Lat. of the Mole 36° 7′ 3″ N., lon. 5° 21′ 2″ W. Mean temp. of year 67° .4, winter 57° .9; summer 77° .8. The celebrated rock (ancient Mons Calpe, one of the "pillars of Hercules"), forms a promontory connected with the continent by an isthmus of sand, & consists of a mass of gray limestone or marble, containing numerous caves, & about 3 m. in length N. to S., by from ¼ to ¾ m. in breadth; it rises abruptly to 1,600 feet above the sea, on all sides except the W., on which the town of Gibraltar is built. It is everywhere fortified by works of amazing strength & extent; & besides these there are two galleries excavated in the rock, 2 m. in length, & of sufficient to admit carriages; at its S. extremity, Europa Point, are a signal-house and a new light-house. Surface parched in dry weather, but after rain covered with vegetation. The town is built on its W. side, which shelves down to the bay; & here the fortifications have latterly been greatly improved & strengthened. Pop. (excluding garrison about 16,000. The principal street is 1 m. in length, well built, paved, & lighted, & many other thoroughfares have been widened of late: but the houses generally are unsuited to the climate, being constructed like those of England, & unfurnished with open courts & galleries, as in the Spanish town San Roque, 5 m. N.W. Principal edifices, the governor's house (attached to which are gardens), the admiralty, naval hospital, victualling office, barracks, cathedral, a modern semi-Moorish structure; & in the mkt.-place, the exchange, with a library, club & news-rooms. Here are a Roman Catholic church, Wesleyan chapel, & synagogue, & various subscription schools. Outside of the "south port" are the esplanade, the English cemetery, & a suburban residence of the governor. The harbor is good, & protected by two moles, one 1,100, & the other 700 feet in length. Gibraltar was made a free port in 1704, & its trade is still considerable, though it has latterly suffered from the rivalry of Malta, Genoa, &c. Public rev. collected in the town about 30,000*l*. Annual expense of garrison to Great Britain 200,000*l*. Ordinances enacted by the Governor alone, subject to the approval of the British sovereign through the Secretary of State for the colonies. (Salary of Gov. Com.-in-chief £5,000. Residence in fortress.) This town derives its name (Gib-el-Tarik, "mountain of Tarik") from its Moorish founder Tarik, or Tarif, who lived early in the 8th century. It was ceded to Spain by the Moors in 1462, and taken by the English, under Sir G. Rooke, in 1704. Under Lord Heathfield it withstood successfully a memorable siege by the French & Spaniards in 1782. —II. (Bay of), an inlet of the Mediterranean, near the S. extremity of Spain, Andalucia, between the rock of Gibraltar on the E., & Cape Carnero on the W. Length & breadth about 6 m. each; greatest depth 110 fathoms. It is well sheltered & admirably adapted for shipping. On its E. side are the town & harbor of Gibraltar, & on the W. the Spanish town & port Algesiras.—III. (Strait of, anc. Fretum Herculeum), the narrow W. Entrance to the Mediterranean, between Spain N., Morocco (Africa), on the S. Length about 50 m.; breadth from 19 to 23 m. Proceeding W. to E., Cape Trafalgar, Tarifa, & Europa Point (S. extremity of Gibraltar Rock), are on its N., & Cape Spartel, Tangier, & Ceuta, on its S. side. A strong current runs here from the Atlantic into the Mediterranean.

GILA, a river, formerly the boundary between the United States & Mexico. It is an affluent of the Colorado of the Gulf of California, & has its sources in the mountains of the Sierra Madre, about lat. 32° 45′ N., & E. of lon. 108° 30′ E.; from which it flows W. & joins the Colorado. Its whole course being about 450 m. About 60 m. from its source, it is 50 feet wide, with an average depth of 2 feet, swift, & clear, the banks covered with trees & a luxuriant vegetation; the former consisting chiefly of cotton wood, sycamore, mezquite, pala, cedars, & larch. Further down, or about lon. 110° W., the banks of the stream, & the country, assume a wild & rugged appearance; the mountains of trap, granite, & red sandstone in irregular & confused strata, but generally dipping sharply to the S., cluster so closely together that it becomes difficult to tell from what direction the river comes, or in what direction it is going.

A few miles lower down, the valley of the Gila widens, and is covered with a dense growth of mezquite (acacia prosopis), cotton wood, & willow, the pitahaya, and every other variety of cactus, the latter flourishing in great luxuriance. The Rio San Pedro, which joins it from the S., & the rivers San Francisco, Salines, and Bonito from the N., are almost the only affluents. Most of the tributaries are small. The Gila is navigable for small boats only, & that but to the village of the Pimos. According to the Treaty of 1854 this river and its valley is entirely in the U.S.

The ruins of numberless houses are found along the whole course of the Gila, proving that these regions were much more populous at a former period than they are now. These ruins are uniformly of the same class, & they are discoverable only by the broken pottery around them, & stones laid in regular order, showing the traces of the foundations. Most of these outlines are irregular, & vary from 40 by 50 to 200 & 400 feet front. The stones are unhewn, & are mostly of an amygdaloid, rounded by attrition.

GLASGOW, a city & parliamentary borough of Scotland, lower ward of Lanarkshire, on the Clyde, 43 m. W. of Edinburgh, in lat. 55° 51′ N., lon. 4° 17′ W. Pop. in 1801, 83,769; in 1841, 274,533; in 1851, 329,097; with suburbs, 345,145. The city is built on a gentle declivity, sloping towards the bank of the river, where 7 large stone, & a wooden bridge, communicate with the suburb of the Gorbals, on the left bank. The leading streets, Gallowgate, Trongate, & Argyle street, run in a continuous line of 2 m. parallel with river, while numerous other streets diverge on both sides. W. of Argyle street are numerous squares & crescents, with many splendid streets & mansions, the residences of the more opulent citizens. Length of city 4¼ miles; breadth 2 m. The most ancient part of the town is on an elevated ground to the N.W., where stands the cathedral of St. Mungo, a fine old Gothic structure, supposed to have been founded in 1136 by Achaius, Bishop of Glasgow, & bearing marks in its architecture of various dates of erection; length 319 feet; height of tower & spire 225 feet. The choir of the cathedral is still used as a place of worship, & a curiously arched crypt below, once used as a church, is now converted into a cemetery. To the E. of the cathedral, in the High street, is the university, founded in 1450 by Pope Nicholas V. It is well endowed, annual income about 20,000l., & consists of a chancellor, rector, dean, principal, 8 college professors, & 14 regius professors; a library with 52,000 vols., a museum founded by Dr. W. Hunter, & an average number of 950 students. Connected with the university is an astronomical observatory, & there is also a botanic garden in N.W. suburbs. The Andersonian university, founded 1795, is for the popular diffusion of science and literature among all classes of the community. Besides these, there are a faculty of physicians and surgeons, a mechanics' institute, high school, 2 normal schools, an athenæum, & numerous private seminaries of education. Charitable institutions, a royal infirmary, lunatic asylum, blind asylum, deaf & dumb institution, town's hospital for the poor, Hutchison's hospital for education of boys, & house of refuge. The jail, court-house, &c., are comprised in a large square building W. end of the Green, a large bridewell in Duke street, a commodious judicial office, with a most efficient body of police. There are 4 banks & several bank agencies in the city; a chamber of commerce & an elegant royal exchange erected in Queen street in 1829; 2 theatres, a city hall, co. building, merchant ho., trades ho., custom-ho., western & union club-houses, barracks, and several monuments & statues adorning the streets & squares. The royalty, originally embracing one parish, is now divided into 10; & including the barony & suburbs, other 18, including quoad sacra pas. Principal churches, St. George's, St. Enoch's, St. Andrew's, St. John's, St. David's, & the Catholic chapel. There are 30 Free churches, 19 United Presbyterian, 4 Independent, 5 Baptist, & 7 other congregations, 4 Methodists, a Unitarian, 4 Episcopal, & 4 Roman Catholic. Glasgow is supplied with water obtained from the Clyde & from springs in the vicinity, by 2 water companies. There are 2 large gas works; & many of the manufacturers supply their own gas. The Green on the N. bank of the river, forms an extensive airing ground of 100 ac.; & E. of the cathedral is a very picturesque necropolis, with 3 other cemeteries in the vicinity. Numerous railroads communicate with the surrounding districts, & the Clyde affords great facilities for steam-boat conveyance. The Broomielaw harbor extends W. from Jamaica Street along the river, & ships of large tonnage come up to the first bridge. The riv. is now deepened, so as to admit ships of 2,000 tons. The wharfs & docks afford extensive accommodation for vessels of every description. Glasgow is celebrated as the great Scottish emporium of trade and manufactures. It was here that Watt first began his improvements on the steam-engine, & the steamboat "Comet" was launched here in 1812. (See Hudson riv.) The aggregate tonnage of sailing and steam-vessels which enter and sail from this port annually is about 1,200,000 tons. The trade of Glasgow rose into importance about the middle of last century, and consisted chiefly of American and W. Indian commerce, embracing nearly a half of the whole British tobacco trade. Since then the manuf. of cotton goods has risen to a great extent, as also woollens and silks, glass and stone ware, large chemical manufactures, with premises occupying 10 ac., & a celebrated chimney 450 ft. high, and 40 ft. diameter at the base; iron foundries, & machinery of all kinds, especially steam-engines. In 1846 there were 141 iron furnaces in the vicinity, & 600,000 tons of iron sold. The ann. consumption of coal, chiefly from pits in the vicinity, is estim. at nearly 2 mill. tons, & 250,000 tons exported. Glasgow was early distinguished for its superior letter-press printing, & its Foulis' edition of the classics & other books. It publishes at present 2 daily newspapers, & about 12 others, at various intervals. There are three large suburbs connected with the city, & containing a pop. of 97,000; Gorbals on the lt. b. of the river, Calton forming the E. suburb, & Anderston the W.; these 3 are boroughs of barony. It has 3 natural divisions; the E. being the Cotswold Hills, varying in height from 200 to upwards of 1,000 feet, & now mostly enclosed & arable; the middle forming the fertile valley of the Severn & its affls.; & the division W. of the Severn, consisting mostly of the Forest of Dean. Chief rivs., the Severn, Upper & Lower Avon, Wye, and Isis. In the hills, sheep farming is the chief branch of industry; the number of sheep is estimated at 600,000, & the annual produce of wool at 16,000 packs. The vale of the Severn, once famous for vineyards, is now equally so for its corn-lands, orchards, gardens, & especially its rich pastures, in which is produced the celebrated Gloucester cheese. The forest produces fine oak timber, excellent perry & the Styre apple cider. Chief minerals, coal & iron ore, extensively worked in the forest dist. Value of mines 21,448*l.* Manufs., besides those of Bristol, consist chiefly of the light, & also of the finest kinds of woollen cloth; the latter are generally preferred to those of Yorkshire; but the trade is not increasing. [Stroud.] In 1838 the co. had 97 woollen factories, employing about 5,500 hands, & cotton factories, employing 1,530 hands. Gloucestershire is divided into 29 hundreds, comprising about 350 pas. in the diocese of Gloucester & Bristol. Chief cities & towns, Gloucester, Bristol, Cheltenham, Stroud, and Cirencester. Railroads connect the co. town with Birmingham, via Cheltenham & Worcester; with Bristol, with Dean-Forest, & with London, by junction at Swindon with the Great Western r. r. A canal, via Stroud, connects the rivs. Thames & Severn; another connects the cities of Gloucester & Hereford; & a third, 18 m. in length, by enabling large vessels to avoid the dangerous navigation of the Severn, brings them up to the city of Gloucester. The co. sends, including bors., 15 members to H. of C.

GRAMPIANS, a celebrated mntn. chain in Scotl., forming the natural rampart which separates the Highlands from the Lowlands. Their limits, owing to numerous parallel ridges & scarcely connected branches, are difficult to define, but they may be said to stretch from the W. coast of Argyleshire & Dumbartonshire N.E.ward across the island, terminating on the E. & N. E. coasts of the cos. Aberdeen & Banff, in 2 branches running on each side of the river Dee. This mountain chain is composed of granite, porphyries, primary schists, quartz, & marble. General aspect wild & rugged, especially on the N. side; on the S. acclivity the slopes are gentler, the pasture finer, & the numerous defiles which indent the range often present scenes of the most romantic beauty. The streams flowing from the N. side are mostly affls. of the Findhorn, Spey, Don, & Dee; those on the S. join the Forth, Tay, & S. Esk. The loftiest summits are Ben Nevis, Ben Macdhui, Cairngorm, Cairntoul, Schichallion, Ben Aven, Ben Lawers, Ben More, & Ben Lomond; the altitudes of which are given under their respective heads.—II. a mntn. range of Australia, Victoria, stretching crescentwise N. & S., between lat. 36° 52′ & 37° 38′ S., & lon. 142° 25′ & 142° 47′ E., bounding E.ward the basin of the Glenelg & its affls. GRANADA, Illiberis, a city of Spain, cap. of a prov., & formerly of a kingdom, & the anc. metropolis of the Moors in Spain, on the Genil, at the influx of the Darro, 120 m. E.S.E. Sevilla. Lat. 37° 16′ N., lon. 3° 45′ 43″ W. Pop. 70,025 (in the time of the Moors it is said to have had half a million inhabitants). It stands partly on the edge of a plain, & partly on mntn. spurs, progressively rising to the Alhambra. It has a most picturesque appearance, still entirely resembling a Mohammedan city, with its crenated walls, terraced gardens, domes, minarets, fountains, old mosques, flat-roofed houses, & projecting balconies. It is irregularly laid out, & badly paved. Chief public edifices, the cathedral, a large & richly decorated edifice, adjacent to which is the chapel of the kings of Spain, with the tombs of Ferdinand & Isabella, 23 pa. churches, all adorned with rich marbles & other works of art, and several convents. The Alhambra (al-hamara "the red"), or anc. palace of the Moorish kings, is an irregular mass of houses & towers on a commanding height, surrounded by groves, & of which the bastioned walls, arches, halls of the Abencerrages & Ambassadors, court of lions, mezquita, & the unfinished palace of Charles V., are the portions most worthy of notice. Granada has a university, 6 colleges, academies of mathematics & design, several hospitals, manufs. of silks & hats, paper mills, royal nitre & gunpowder factories, & some trade in oil, &c. Its prosperity suffered greatly—first, on its being wrested from the Moors in 1492, & next, by the separation from Spain of her Indian possessions. Its principal law-courts also were removed to Albacete in 1835. Around it are numerous fine public walks & objects of interest, the principal of which is the Soto de Roma, or "wood of pomegranates;" also a very rich Carthusian convent.

The territory of Greece is nearly all mountainous, the culminating point of the whole is Mount Guiona in Parnassus, lat. 38° 38′ 40″ N., lon., 22° 16′ 24″ E., 8,070 feet in elevation. The principal chain, that of Pindus, across the country on the N., & Mount Othrys, one of its branches, forms the greater part of the N. boundary of Greece. S. of this, the principal chain turns S.E., & forms two branches, Œta on the N., and Parnassus on the S. Another chain extends from Cape Maryatico in the channel of the Egrippos, W. to the Morea, which it enters by the Isthmus of Corinth. The centre of the Morea forms an elevated table-land, enclosed by three mountain chains, the most extensive of which crosses the peninsula on the N. The coasts are elevated, irregular, & deeply indented; the principal gulfs are those of Arta, Volo, Lepanto or Corinth, Ægina or the Saronic Gulf, Argolis, Laconia, Koron, Arcadia. Chief capes Marathon & Colonna or Sunium in Attica, Malea, Matapan, Gallo, & Klarenza in the Morea. Greece has numerous streams, but they are mostly rapid & unfit for navigation; the princip. are, on the continent, the Aspropotamos, an affl. of the Ionian Sea, only the lower course of which belongs to Greece; the Phidaris, which flows S. to the Gulf of Patras, the Hellada, an affl. of the channel of Talanti & the Cephissus, which flows S. to the Gulf of Ægina. The chief rivers in the Morea are the Peneus & Alpheus on the W., & the Pamisus & Eurotas on the S. The only extensive lake is Topolais, ancient Cpais, between Thebes & Bœotia. Climate temperate and generally healthy, except in some parts of the coasts, & in the vicinity of the lakes, violent storms occur in spring & autumn. Earthquakes are rare. Caverns, mineral and gaseous springs are numerous. Minerals are few & varied, but little worked; marble & other building materials are abundant.

Vegetable products vary according to elevation of the soil. The olive, fig, currant-grape of Corinth, vine, melons, rice, cotton, the orange, date, citron, & pomegranate are cultivated on the coasts, & in dists. situated at an elevation of 1,600 feet, where also the myrtle, the mastic, & the plane tree flourish. Above 6,000 ft. in elevation, great part of the mountains are covered with pine forests. The principal domestic animals are sheep & goats; bees are still extensively reared; wild animals are numerous, & game abundant. Manufs., which are mostly domestic & very inconsiderable, comprise silks, chiefly in the island of Tinos, cottons, woollens, coarse pottery, leather, & beet root sugar. Salt, extracted chiefly from the lagoons of Missolonghi, is the most important mineral product. The principal resource of the inhabitants of Greece has always been in maritime commerce, & this, long interrupted by the war of independence, has lately begun to revive, especially with Turkey. The principal ports are Athens (the Piræus), Patras, Nauplia, Syra, Kalamata, and Navarino. The pop. belong to the ancient Greek race in the W. of the continental portion & E. of Parnassus; in the Morea the same race prevails, but here it is more mixed. The pop. of the islands is a mixture of Albanians & Greeks. The great majority belong to the Greek church. Greece was erected into a kingdom under Otho, second son of the King of Bavaria, 30th Aug. 1832. The gov. was at first nearly absolute monarchy; the revolution of September 1843 introduced a constitution; & in March 1844, a government of limitation was proclaimed. The king exercises the power of the executive, & commands the army & navy. The chief tribunals are, a court of cassation at Athens, 2 royal courts, 10 tribunals of premiers instance, & 2 tribunals of commerce. The chief educational establishments are the university at Athens; 5 gymnasia at Athens, Syra, Nauplia, Patras, & Hydra; a normal, polytechnic, a military, & a naval school. Public expenditure, 1853, 19,408,081 dr., equal to $1,078,000; revenue, 17,701,966 dr. In 1853, the army consisted of 9,848 men, of whom 325 were cavalry. The navy consisted of one 26 gun corvette, 1 steamer, 4 guns, 120 horse power), & 16 small vessels, with an aggregate of 56 guns, total 86 guns. The mercantile marine in 1853, consisted of 4,320 vessels, with an aggregate of 247,616 tons, several steam-packets, & smaller vessels.

Baffin Bay & Davis Strait, S. & S.E. the Atlantic, and on other sides the Arctic Ocean. Pop. 1850, 9,400, all Esquimaux, except about 150 Europeans. Surface generally high, rocky, & barren; the elevated parts covered with eternal snow & glaciers, extending, in many parts, to the sea shores; but small quantities of corn, potatoes, & kitchen herbs are raised in the S., & some edible berries, with scattered birch, alder, and willow trees, grasses and lichens grow wild, but July is the only month in which there is no snow. Extreme summer temp. 59° Fahr., winter minus 40°; mean annual temp. of N. & S. Greenland 27° .5. Fahr. The natives, or Esquimaux, are a peculiar race, allied to the Mongolian family, of short squat stature & dark skin, employed chiefly in fishing and seal hunting. The region was first discovered by a Norwegian in 981, & soon after colonised from Iceland. Davis re-discovered Greenland in 1587, & in the 17th century, the Danes re-established a communication with the lost colony. In 1837, it comprised 38 European settlements & two missionary stations, mostly established on the W. coast. The country is divided into N. & S. inspectorates, separated by the Longfiord, in lat. 67° N. Principal vills., Frederick's harbor, Julian's harbor, & Good Hope.

GREENWICH, a parl. bor., town & pa. of Engl., co. Kent, on the S. bank of the Thames, 3¾ m. E.S.E. London Bridge. Lat. of observatory 51° 28′ 6″ N., lon. 77° 2′ 48″ E. from the national observatory, Washington, U. S. A. Area of parish 2,050 acres. Pop. 1851, 101,784. Mean temp. of year 48°.9; winter 37°.7; summer 63°.3 Fahr. It is mostly well built, though many of the streets are narrow. It has, including its fine parish church, 70 churches, viz.,—11 Baptist, 2 Bible Christian, 21 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 7 Independent, 18 Methodist, 2 Mormon, 3 Presbyterian, 3 Roman Catholic, & 7 isolated congregations. Its chief edifice is the magnificent naval hospital, the noblest establishment of the kind in Europe, with the finest palatial structure in England. It occupies the site of the royal palace of Placentia, a favorite residence of the Tudors & Stuarts, & was commenced in the reign of Charles II., & in the reign of William III. granted as an asylum for disabled seamen of the navy, and completed gratuitously by C. Wren, by the aid of parliamentary grants & private contributions. It consists of 4 noble quadrangles between the Thames & Greenwich Park. On the river side is a terrace 865 feet in length, forming one side of the grand square; the buildings on the two other sides of which are surmounted by two conspicuous domes of beautiful proportions. At the head of this square is the older portion of the palace, built by Inigo Jones. It is hospital, which is on certain days open to the public, contains dormitories & dining-halls for about 2,700 old or disabled seamen (besides whom a much greater number of out-pensioners live out of the building), a beautiful chapel, with rich carved work, & a painting by West of the shipwreck of St. Paul; a spacious hall 106 feet in height by 56 in breadth, decorated with representations of sea-fights, statues, & portraits of naval heroes. Detached from the edifice are the buildings of a school for the sons of naval officers & seamen. Greenwich Hospital was, in 1732, enriched with the forfeited estates of Lord Derwentwater. The management of its revenue is vested in commissioners under the Admiralty. Greenwich Park, between the hospital & Blackheath, first enclosed by Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, protector, in the reign of Henry VI., contains about 200 acres of undulating & wooded land, has numerous herds of deer, & is a good deal resorted to by the Londoners. On one of its eminences, 160 feet above the river, and once occupied by Greenwich Castle, is the Royal Observatory, founded by Charles II., in 1674, the residence of the astronomer royal, & from which the longitudes of all British & American charts are reckoned, and, indeed, of all charts published in the English language. Greenwich has various endowed charities, comprising a grey coat school for about 120 boys, a green coat school endowed for 26 boys, a girls' school, an hospital or college for 20 pensioners, founded by Lambard the antiquary, in 1558; Trinity hospital, founded by the Earl of Northampton, in 1613, for 20 pensioners, patr. Mercers' Company; a union workhouse, market-house, & theatre. Markets, Wednesdeay & Saturday. Fairs at Easter and Whitsuntide, which attract immense crowds from the metropolis. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Greenwich was the birthplace of Henry VIII., & of his daughters Mary & Elizabeth; & Edward VI. died here.

GRINNELL LAND, a tract of Terra Firma, in the Arctic Ocean, the south coast of which trends in a western, & finally a N.W. direction, was discovered by the American Expedition, in search of Sir John Franklin, Sept. 21st, 1850. Of this interesting discovery (which the British explorers in this region modestly claim, and call it "Albert Land"), Dr. Kane, the journalist of the American Expedition, thus speaks:—

"September 21, 1850.—We have drifted still more to the Northward & Eastward. A reliable observation gave us lat. 75° 20′ 38″. Apparently we are not more than seven miles from the shore, which is still of the characteristic limestone of the lower channel. Terraces of shingle are rising one above another in regular succession. They follow the curve-like sweep of the indentations. Estimated by eye, the height of the uppermost is about forty feet above the water line; but I was of course unable at that distance to compare the levels of the successive ledges with those observed between Capes Spencer & Innes on the opposite side. About tea-time, we saw a set of hill-tops to the North by West, apparently of the same configuration with the hills around us. The coast of Cornwallis Island now receded to the Westward, & an intermediate space, either of water or of very low beach, separates it from the new land to the North & East of us. Whether this be a cape from a Northern Terra Incognita, or a new bend of the opposite shores of North Devon, I am not prepared to say. We took sextant bearings. From this date we may claim the discovery of that land, which we were able afterwards to define satisfactorily. 'Grinnel Land,' as it was afterwards named by our commander, was thus discovered nearly eight months before it was delineated & named by Capt. Penny in May, 1851.

"September 22*d*.—This day of rest (Sunday), which opened with clear, cold serenity, gave us an opportunity of seeing the unvisited shores of Wellington Channel. Our latitude by artificial horizon was now 75° 25′, or about sixty miles North of Cape Hotham. Cape Bowden on the eastern side had disappeared, & on the West a dark projecting cape from which we took our sextant angles, was seen bearing to the West of South. To the Northward & Westward low land was seen having the appearance of an island, although it may have been connected with the shore by an unseen strip. Its eastern termination was more elevated. The bend of the Western shore, was now clearly to the Westward. It was rolling with the terraced shingle beaches before observed, & ended or apparently ended, abruptly. After & beyond these to the North, without visible land intervening, were the mountain tops which terminated our view. These were two in number, one higher than the other. A third summit, more distant than the others, was seen by me from the mast-head, but the bases of all these as is often the case with distant mountains could not be traced to the horizon. Without the aid of a known height, & in an atmosphere so deceptive, I could not venture to give their distance in miles. Lieut. De Haven estimated the nearest peak the nearest, & most conspicuous, at about fifty miles. It bore North North-East."

Here Dr. Kane is direct & positive. He is not compelled to resort to "a division of opinions," nor a "new idea," nor an "if." He is plain & outright. He says: "GRINNELL LAND, as it was afterwards named by our commander, was thus discovered nearly eight months before it was delineated & named by Captain Penny in May, 1851."

Lieutenant Griffin, commander of the Rescue, in his narrative of De Haven's voyage, is as clear and positive as De Haven & Kane, as to the Discovery:—"A succession of southerly gales occurring, we were driven, with all the ice in sight, up Wellington Channel, until we reached the latitude 75° 25′. From that position much new land was seen. A range of high mountains very justly received the name of Grinnell. A second leading to the N.W. was named after the distinguished gentleman at the head of the National Observatory, Mr. Maury. Capes & Islets never before seen, unless by the missing navigators, were named. In gazing on that which was entirely new to man, the spirit of enterprise became animated—we felt disposed even then to load the sledge, & toil slowly in the direction of the mountain range. Captain Penny, the following spring, without knowledge of our having been ahead of him, gave English names to the above land, calling Grinnell Land, Albert Land; Maury Channel, Victoria Channel, &c. The mistake, as soon as it is explained, I suppose will be corrected on the English charts."

Lieutenant Griffin erred in his supposition. The "mistake" was sufficiently explained before Penny's, or Arrowsmith's, or any other chart of the Arctic Discoveries in 1850, was published. The Lords of the Admiralty received officially an explanation of the "mistake," more than two months prior to the date of the Admiralty chart, of April 8, 1852. Their "mistake" has not yet been corrected. They still adhere to the name of "Albert" land. (Cd. Force's Pamphlet on Grinnell Land.)

Of which 750,000 are of the aboriginal race, 150,000 Mestizoes, & between 7,000 & 8,000 whites; & there are considerable numbers of an almost pure negro race. Guatemala is wholly mountainous, the continuation of the Andes range traversing it S.E. to N.W. at no great distance from the Pacific, & sending off lateral ridges towards the Atlantic, thus forming many valleys, but enclosing few plains. Rising from the main range are considerable number of volcanoes. All of them border closely on the Pacific coast. Six are said to be active, viz., Amilpas, 13,160 feet above the sea; Sapotitlan, 13,050; Atitlan, 12,500; Aqua, which sends forth torrents of water, 15,000; & Fuego & Pacaya. Earthquakes are frequent. The surface is well drained by numerous streams, of which the Lacantun, flowing N.W. & forming part of the Mexican boundary, & the Montagua, & the Polochic, continued by the Dulce, both flowing N.E. to the Bay of Honduras, and their tributaries, are the largest; but besides these, there are many streams of comparatively short courses, falling into the Pacific. There are likewise sevl. lakes, the most important being the Dulce, through which the greater part of the foreign trade is carried on; Amititlan, and Atitlan, and Penten, 30 m. long & 9 m. broad, near the frontiers of Yucatan, in the little known province of Vera Paz. The table-land, which forms a considerable portion of the Republic, has a mild & genial climate; but in more elevated situations the cold is quite severe. The soil generally is of great fertility, producing maize & wheat of superior quality, excellent rice, legumes, & vegetables & tropical fruits in great variety. The most important produce, in a commercial view, is cochineal, the cultivation of which has, of late years, been rapidly increasing. The total amount of this article produced annually is about 20,000 bales. Cacao, tobacco, sugar, coffee, vanilla, & cotton are grown to a greater or less extent, & also considerable quantities of indigo. The silk-worm is cultivated, & caoutchouc is obtained in considerable quantities. In the altos, or N. parts of the republic, consid. flocks of sheep are raised, the wool of which is manufactured by the natives into a coarse twilled fabric, called gerga; which, again, is made into various articles of clothing, including large plaids called ponchos, in which consid. taste is displayed. For metals & other products, see Central America. In the year 1851, the total exports amounted in value to $994,488, comprising silver, cochineal, indigo, cigars, sarsaparilla, mahogany, cocoa, hides, & dye-woods. Value of imports in same year, $1,354,430. The expenses of the year 1852 amounted to $446,276; revenue about the same amount. Debt of interior $800,000; exterior, $400,000. Army 1,000 men, besides which there is a National Militia force of 5,000 men. Guatemala declared its independence from Spain on 21st Sept., 1821, & separated itself from the Mex. confed., July 1st, 1823. Formed with Honduras, Nicaragua, San Salvador, & Costa Rica, the Repub of Central America, 7th Oct., 1842, but the compact was dissolved on the 21st March, 1847, & each state became an indpendent republic. Guatemala, on 19th Oct., 1851, adopted a new constitution,
